Winston Pickett
Long Island Jewish World
115 Middle Neck Road
Great Neck, NY 11021

Dear Winston:

I am writing to tell you our news, and I am thrilled to pieces about your news! We'll have to dissect this on a Shabbat soon.

Meanwhile, here's the CIJE news:

The first dramatic findings of a new in-depth study of North American Jewish educators will be presented at a forum at the CJF General Assembly, on November 17, at 3:45 PM.

The Minister of Education of the State of Israel, the Hon. Amnon Rubinstein, will come especially to join the study's authors, Dr. Adam Gamoran, of the University of Wisconsin, and Dr. Ellen Goldring, of Vanderbilt University, to discuss the findings. Prof. Rubinstein will delineate a new partnership between Israel and North America for the training of Jewish educators.

The forum will be chaired by Morton L. Mandel, a leading philanthropist committed to Jewish education. Alan Hoffmann, executive director of CIJE, will complete the discussion with "From Data to Action," outlining crucial next steps for revitalizing Jewish education within communities.

Attached is an advance copy of the policy brief, "Background and Professional Training of Teachers in Jewish Schools," which will be released formally by CIJE at the GA. The brief is based on the most extensive research initiative currently undertaken in the field of Jewish education: a two-year study of all the classroom educators in Atlanta, Baltimore, and Milwaukee, the three lead communities chosen as pilot sites by CIJE. We believe the profile of teachers offered by the study resembles that of most American Jewish communities.

As you know, Jewish identity and continuity have dominated the Jewish agenda, both locally and nationally. In the intense re-examination of priorities in which the American Jewish community has been engaged, Jewish education is increasingly viewed as a key avenue to Jewish commitment.

The policy brief highlights a central problem in North American Jewish education--the insufficient preparation of teachers in Jewish schools--and presents a concrete plan for action, a clear first step in addressing the continuity crisis by creating comprehensive professional development for teachers. The brief also offers several surprises that question widely-held assumptions on which past policy has been based.

Many Jewish communities have set up local continuity commissions, which are engaged in an effort to address issues of Jewish identity and continuity at a local level. This policy brief has direct implications for the priorities and allocations within individual Jewish communities.

The GA forum promises to be both lively and provocative. If Jerry plans to attend, we can arrange some private time before the forum with the Hon. Amnon Rubinstein, Morton Mandel, Drs. Gamoran and Goldring, and Alan Hoffmann for questions about the study and its implications for your community.

This policy brief has not yet been publicly distributed. We are sending you this material in advance of the GA because we believe that these findings will be very influential--community by community--in building the profession of Jewish educators in a meaningful way.

Please let me know if you need more information. I think there's an important story here.

And please call us soon with the details of your mitzvah!

Best,

Nessa Rapoport

Stewart AIN
THE JEWISH WEEK

November 21, 1994

Dear Stewart:

Here is all you requested--and more! As you may know, CIJE was founded to implement the 1990 recommendations of the Commission on Jewish Education in North America. CIJE is a continental organization, whose headquarters are in New York. In fact, this is the first year we are fully staffed in the city.

I've sent you the remarks of Mort Mandel, Amnon Rubinstein, and Alan Hoffmann, CIJE's executive director, who spoke of "From Data to Action." (I also included a copy of the policy brief, our press release, our brochure--and the JTA story.) The Rubinstein speech makes a bridge between the training of teachers for North American Jewish schools and the quest we share with Israel for an authentic Jewish identity through education.

Our mission is to be a catalyst for systemic change in Jewish education, and any research we fund is in the service of policy rather than for the abstract social good! (That's why the last part of the policy brief presents the components of a plan that communities can implement.)

The GA forum presentation made two central points: Dr. Gamoran spoke about the teachers' lack of training before they enter the field; their lack of in-service training in the field, compared to public school teachers, for example; and their surprising commitment to the field as a vocation--they are not the revolving door that people thought. This makes a compelling argument for investing in the teachers as a first step toward improving the quality of current Jewish education.

The Minister spoke about the old prototype--we help Israel--and the new one he was offering, of a collegial partnership between the knowledge North American Jews have gained in struggling over issues of identity and Israel's resources in Jewish teacher training. (There is a crisis in personnel at the senior level in North American Jewish education; outside the haredi world, there are only 75 graduates a year who have both a degree in Jewish studies and a degree in pedagogy. Meanwhile, it is estimated that there are between 20,000 and 30,000 positions in Jewish education in North America.)

If you need anything else, or if you need to speak to anyone at CIJE in greater detail, please call. In the meantime, my thanks for a) turning up on Thursday; and b) asking intelligent questions. You definitely added to my lifespan!

Best,

Nessa Rapoport

Dear Marc:

As clips of the CIJE data drift across my desk, courtesy of my new friend, Burrelle's, I think of you with increasing thanksgiving. You were wonderfully generous to me in the midst of the GA craziness, and I am in your debt. CIJE has received strong and substantial coverage in many places, expected and not: None of it would have happened without your wise counsel and kindness.

Happy secular new year, and hope we get a chance to talk in a more amenable situation than the hallowed halls of the Denver convention center.

Best,

Nessa Rapoport

Dear Gary:

There I was, minding my own business, reading the Week while loafing at my in-laws, when to my astonishment I saw not one but two pieces on CIJE's Study of Educators. I thought I'd died and gone to press heaven. My next reaction was to consider extremely early retirement, but I had to reject it on theological grounds. (Too proximate to real heaven.)

This letter is to thank you for being so hospitable to CIJE's work, and, more important, for being my indispensable guide to the arcane ways of your profession--for which you clearly need no in-service training.

Our household continues to love reading the Week. Many a Friday night I find Tobi hogging the paper. If you still ran your advice column, I could find out if the marriage can be saved.

Happy Sylvester--and hope to see you in a more conventional social situation than the halls of the GA.

Dear Stewart:

Your strong and substantive story has now been faxed around the world, to a great reception. And I keep hearing about it here, which is very satisfying. (I can now tell you with authority that Jewish communal leaders definitely read The Jewish Week!)

Thanks for the story--and thanks even more for being such a mensch at my maiden-voyage press conference.

Happy lower-case new year.

Major New Study of Jewish Educators
Finds Serious Lack of Training Alongside Significant Commitment

Honorary Chair

NEW YORK -- A new in-depth study of all the Jewish educators in Atlanta, Baltimore, and Milwaukee reveals that classroom teachers have far less professional background and in-service training than is commonly expected of teachers in general education. And yet the majority of teachers in day schools, supplementary schools, and pre-schools are strongly committed to Jewish education as a career.

According to the policy brief on the "Background and Professional Training of Teachers in Jewish Schools," to be released formally by the Council for Initiatives in Jewish Education (CIJE) on November 17 at the General Assembly in Denver, the findings offer a powerful first step in the Jewish community's continuity crisis: investment in comprehensive in-service training for current Jewish educators.

"Now every Jewish community can know where to start and what to do," said Alan Hoffmann, executive director of CIJE. "This is a major opportunity for North American Jewry."

Among the findings:

 Over 80% of the teachers surveyed lacked professional training either in education or in Judaica--or in both.

 Almost 30% of teachers in supplementary schools had no Jewish schooling after the age of 13.

 Ten percent of the teachers in Jewish pre-school programs are not Jewish; in one community, the figure is as high as 21%.

 Forty percent of Judaica teachers in day schools have neither a degree in Jewish studies nor certification as Jewish educators, yet they attend fewer than 2 in-service workshops a year on average. (This is one-sixth the requirement for state-licensed teachers in the state of Wisconsin, for example.)

 And yet, almost 60% of the teachers view Jewish education as their career. Only 6% plan to seek positions outside Jewish education in the near future.

The policy brief, the first of a series based on the CIJE Study of Educators, outlines a plan for action that every North American Jewish community can undertake to improve its teaching personnel.

The complete study, conducted by Dr. Adam Gamoran, Professor of Sociology and Educational Policy Studies at the University of Wisconsin, and Dr. Ellen Goldring, Professor of Educational Leadership and Associate Dean of Peabody College of Education at Vanderbilt University, will be available in 1995 from CIJE.

CIJE's chair, Morton L. Mandel, of Cleveland, Ohio, is a former president of the Council of Jewish Federations (CJF) and a leading philanthropist in the field of Jewish education.

"Although some of these statistics correspond to what we may have suspected anecdotally," said Mr. Mandel, "there are also distinct surprises. We believe that Jewish communities should be able to replicate this research method, extrapolate from these conclusions, and begin to address the personnel needs of Jewish education in a meaningful way."

CIJE was established to implement the conclusions of the influential Commission on Jewish Education in North America (1988-90). The Commission's final report determined that the revitalization of Jewish education will depend upon building the profession of Jewish education and mobilizing community support for Jewish education.

In undertaking research with implications for communal policy, CIJE's goal is to be a catalyst for systemic change within communities by providing the hard data that will allow thoughtful planning for building the profession of Jewish educators. CIJE also initiates educational reform by working in partnership with a wide range of communal and continental organizations, foundations, universities, and denominational movements.

The Minister of Education of the State of Israel, the Hon. Amnon Rubinstein, came especially to join the study's authors, Dr. Adam Gamoran, of the University of Wisconsin, and Dr. Ellen Goldring, of Vanderbilt University, to discuss the findings. Prof. Rubinstein delineated a new partnership between Israel and North America for the training of Jewish educators.

Honorary Chair

The forum was chaired by Morton L. Mandel, a leading philanthropist committed to Jewish education. Alan Hoffmann, executive director of CIJE, completed the discussion with "From Data to Action," outlining crucial next steps for revitalizing Jewish education within communities.

Attached is a copy of the policy brief, "Background and Professional Training of Teachers in Jewish Schools," which was released formally by CIJE at the GA. The brief is based on the most extensive research initiative currently undertaken in the field of Jewish education: a two-year study of all the classroom educators in Atlanta, Baltimore, and Milwaukee, the three lead communities chosen as pilot sites by CIJE. We believe the profile of teachers offered by the study resembles that of most American Jewish communities.

As you know, Jewish identity and continuity have dominated the Jewish agenda, both locally and nationally. In the intense re-examination of priorities in which the American Jewish community has been engaged, Jewish education is increasingly viewed as a key avenue to Jewish commitment.

The policy brief highlights a central problem in North American Jewish education--the insufficient preparation of teachers in Jewish schools--and presents a concrete plan for action, a clear first step in addressing the continuity crisis by creating comprehensive professional development for teachers. The brief also offers several surprises that question widely-held assumptions on which past policy has been based.

Many Jewish communities have set up local continuity commissions, which are engaged in an effort to address issues of Jewish identity and continuity at a local level. This policy brief has direct implications for the priorities and allocations within individual Jewish communities.

Dear J. J.:

At last I have the moment I needed to send you the policy brief, as I have wanted to do for a long time. As I told you, these findings received widespread coverage, in no small measure because of your cogent advice. Many thanks. I've included a sample, so that you can see what you've wrought.

The brief juxtaposes the severe lack of training of most teachers in Jewish school settings with an unexpected degree of commitment and stability to make a strong case for far greater and more comprehensive in-service training for teachers in the field than currently exists.

As you know, the Jewish community is disproportionately well-educated compared to the general American population--but does not bring the same expectations of excellence to Jewish education. Let's hope, for the sake of Josh, Mattie and Emma, that we can do something about it in our own lifetimes!

Love to Shifra. I've included a copy for her, as well, since she is on my master list of great Jewish readers.

See you soon.

Dear Lesley:

Since I just wrote a letter to Marc in which I sang your praises, I figured the least I could do is tell you myself. Your story was excellent, and, as I said to him, has been sent around the world as the findings of the policy brief--copy enclosed--get increasing attention. (I told him, too, that San Francisco was the first community to request a large number of copies for distribution within its federation.)

I hope you'll continue to apply your intelligence to the issues of Jewish education, which certainly deserve a journalist who understands them deeply.

Best,

Dear Marc:

I wanted to thank you for the outstanding story and let you know that it is being sent, quite literally, around the world as an increasing number of educators and communities are using the policy brief to reexamine the training of personnel in Jewish education.

Three months later, the coverage has not stopped; we have a sheaf of clips. You might be interested, too, in the fact that San Francisco was the first community to request substantial numbers of the brief for distribution within its federation and beyond. (Nechama Tamler attended our GA forum.)

Lesley did a terrific job. Her understanding of the issues in Jewish education really showed in the intelligence of the piece. (She also asked us great questions in her interview.)

If you are going to be involved in the planning of the press and the GA for next year (I don't know if you want to take further years off your life), let me know. It took years off my life to figure out what was going on, and I'd like a little less agita next year. (I hope we'll have something provocative to announce in the coming year as well.)

Where is the JPA meeting? Can outsiders turn up? I have a great positive case study here!

Talk to you soon.

Best,
