PESACH BLENDS PAST AND PRESENT

It is the genius of the Jewish festivals that they are never content to dispose of history as something entirely of the past, but instead find ways of making it contemporaneous. The feast of Passover has accomplished this in many ways. Its observance has always emphasized that the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian slavery must be regarded by every Jew as though he himself had been present at the redemption. This is the meaning of the condemnation of the wicked one among the four sons, who puts his question: "What mean YE by this service?" when it should be: "What mean WE?"

Every age has applied the hope of liberation to the enslavement of its own times. During the Roman persecutions, in particular, the Pesach devotions rose to an unprecedented fervor, for the name of Egypt was identified with Rome and Pharaoh with the Caesars. The "Pesach of Egypt" was felt to be the forerunner of the "Pesach of the Future," when deliverance would come from every new imperial tyrant.

In Palestine today Jewish colonies have devised special Seder services, linking the hardships of the Jews of Egypt and their long road to freedom with their own difficult victories over a neglected soil and an unfavorable environment.

The old names and incidents of the Haggadah find their all too bitter counterparts as well, in current Jewish life, and the Seder services in Jewish homes of Berlin and Vienna will not be reminiscent of the past, but expressive of the present, and prophetic of the future.

"The Great Sabbath"

The spirit of Passover could not be confined in Jewish life to its mere week of observance proper; it leaped over and captivated the Sabbath preceding it, also, Therefore this day is called "Shabbos Ha-godol" or "The Great Sabbath." Replete with anticipation of the coming festival, the day became devoted to a (Continued on Page 4) JUNIOR ALUMNI FIRESIDE Sunday, April 16th, at 3:00 P. ### A DISTINGUISHED ARTIST . . . A WORTHY CAUSE

Mischa Elman, one of the world's foremost violinists for thirty years, is a renowned humanitarian as well. In Cleveland—at the Public Auditorium on Tuesday, April 11th—and in twenty-five other cities from coast to coast, this eminent artist is donating his genius and his talent to assist refugees of all faiths.

Stirred by the sad plight of victims of persecution, Mischa Elman volunteered to tour the nation under sponsorship of a national non-sectarian committee. Mr. Elman is giving this unprecedented series of concerts without any compensation whatsoever, and the entire proceeds will be devoted to the assistance of the needy. Funds raised by the Cleveland concert-on April 11th-and by every other Refugee Concert will be apportioned equally among the three sponsoring organizations-The American Committee for Christian German Refugees, the Committee for Catholic Refugees from Germany and the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee.

Cleveland, a city famed for its civic spirit, its tolerance and its love of liberty, surely will not fail to respond to this cause which unites men and women consideration of the laws and significance of Passover. Traditionally, a portion of the Haggadah ("Story" told at the Seder) is included in the service, and the Rabbi traditionally would take this occasion to deliver his most elaborate and learned sermon of the year. To complete the foretaste of festivity, a pudding of matzoh-meal is prepared for this day.

Ancient Professor Quiz

The effective technique of making ordinary facts interesting by marshalling them into a contest of questions and answers in a series, is much older than "Professor Quiz." Our Seder services proves this, for "Who Knows One ?" employs the same technique. Similar to the riddle-songs of many folk, this quiz contest of numbers is striking enough to eatch the interest even of the very young and fix it upon certain essentials of Judaism: One God, two tables of the Covenant, three patriarchs, ten commandments, twelve tribes, etc. Recited at the close of the service it becomes, together with Chad Gadyo (A Kid, A Kid), a light and lively dessert.

Hard Labor for German Jews

Passover seems a grimly appropriate time for the German government to impose hard manual labor on its Jewish people. This is the manner in which it is fulfilling its voluntary promise to the Evian Committee to allow German Jews to work and earn a living until they emigrate. Only a few Jews are expected to have the opportuntiy of employment at their former occupations. Instead, the Labor Ministry plans to employ them principally in road construction, building, soil improvement or in brickyards. where they can easily be separated from non-Jewish workers. Jews on relief will be the first to be drafted. Here is the technique of Egypt over again: "And they made their lives bitter with hard service, in mortar and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field; in all their service, wherein they made them serve with rigour." (Exodus 1:14).
