in other countries where they can make permanent homes.

(2) . . . All we can do is to estimate on the reasonable doctrine of chances that when this ghastly war ends there may be not one million but ten million or twenty million men, women and children belonging to many races and many religions living in many countries and possibly on several continents who will enter into the wide picture the problem of the human refugee.

I ask therefore that as the second great task that lies before this committee it start at this time a serious and probably a fairly expansive effort to survey and study definitely and scientifically this geographical and economic problem of resettling several million people in new areas on the earth's surface.

Conference Disposes: The Intergovernmental Committee officers immediately got to work on the first aspect of the problem, while they cabled their home government for instructions regarding the second part.

(1) Meeting Wednesday at the State Department, the committee embarked on the "short-range program" by deciding to launch immediately colonization in the Philippine Islands and Dominican Republic with "token groups" of refugees residing in the Netherlands, Belgium, Switzerland and the Scandinavian countries. The 60,000 refugees in these neutral countries, it was decided, presented a more pressing problem than those in Britain and France.

Accordingly, engineers, builders and health experts are proceeding to the two territories to prepare the groundwork for the colonization projects, which are being financed from privately-contributed funds. Negotiations will also be begun immediately regarding settlement in other lands, such as British and Dutch Guiana and Brazil.

Colonization schemes for Alaska are not viewed by the committee as of practical value at the moment because of American immigration quotas, but Secretary of Interior, Harold L. Ickes declared at a press conference on Thursday that only a "dog in the manger" attitude prevented the opening of Alaska, and he added that he planned to present an Alaskan colonization plan to the conference.

(2) The proposal for a survey looking toward a vast resettlement scheme apparently took the foreign delegates by surprise, and they were obligated to seek instructions from their governments. After the third session the committee adjourned until next Thursday, when it will discuss the Roosevelt proposal.

Meanwhile, a technical committee was named to consider all places of the long-range scheme. The committee is headed by Robert Pell, State Department expert on refugee questions, and includes British, French and Netherlands experts.

GERMANY'S ANTI-JEWISH PROGRAM

In all her territories the Reich continued this week to press action against the Jews. Reports continued to be heard about the Nazi project for establishment of a Ghetto Jewish region in part of Poland.

Joel Cang, former Warsaw correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, estimated that 60,000 Jews had been killed during the war in Poland. The Danzig Vorposten, Danzig Nazi organ, reported that Jews who returned to the Polish town of Thorn after fleeing in advance of the German armies had been "swept out" of a synagogue in which they took refuge.

WASHINGTON CONFERENCE

Last July 19, at a session of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees in London, American Vice-Chairman Myron C. Taylor, conveyed an invitation to the chairman, vice-chairman and director of the committee to meet the President in conference at the White House in the first week in September. Since that invitation was extended, the war broke out radically changing the nature of the refugee problem. The conference, postponed six weeks from its original date, opened on Tuesday, October 17th.

Roosevelt Proposes: The parley opened with a luncheon at the White House at which President Roosevelt outlined his view of the Intergovernmental Committee's two-fold task in the future, to-wit:

(1) . . . the current work must not be abandoned. It must be redirected. We have with us the problem of helping those individuals and families who are at this moment in countries of refuge and who, for the sake of the world and themselves, can best be placed in permanent domiciles during the actual course of the war without confusing their lot with the lot of those who in increasing numbers will suffer as a result of the war itself.

That I may call the short-range program. At this moment there are probably not more than two or three hundred thousand refugees who are in dire need and who must as quickly as possible be given opportunity to settle

THE IDEAL LAYMAN

The layman, for his part, must be, to begin with, a willing recipient of that which the Synagogue offers. He must feel the need of the Synagogue and its potency to bring him personal comfort, guidance, and fortitude in his daily life. Those to whom the Synagogue has lost its appeal in this respect cannot be expected to do any of the other things which follow. Without a spiritual purpose underlying the program of the Synagogue and the work of the rabbi, the Synagogue's justification, to use a legal phrase, would cease and determine. Assuming that spiritual purpose equally in those we call laymen, who have enrolled themselves in the Synagogue and subscribed with their hand to the Jewish heritage, the rabbi has a right to expect that they participate fully and whole-heartedly in what the Synagogue has to offer. This should, of right, begin with the officers and leaders and not end until it embraces every member and family according to their need. The layman should have a full share not only in partaking of the Synagogue's benefits, but in planning its program and policy with and in cooperation with its spiritual leader, the rabbi.

In this sense, as we have phrased it, on a previous occasion, rabbi and layman must be co-partners in the Synagogue enterprise, co-workers in carrying out its program and in meeting its responsibilities. This calls for mutual understanding and confidence. It means that the rabbi cannot fulfill his high office without the counsel, cooperation, and participation of the layman and that the layman, while he has the right to expect that the Synagogue satisfy his vital need, must on his own account open his mind and heart to its message and to the opportunities that it affords him for moral and spiritual sustenance and for Jewish living.

Nazis have started a large-scale inquiry of Jews in Poland suspected of having funds abroad, according to reports in Scandinavian countries. Jewish former traders who had relations with firms abroad were forced to sign documents authorizing German banks to collect their accounts abroad.

SOVIET RUSSIA AND THE JEWS

The Jews in Soviet-Poland appeared to be faring generally better than those in the German area—so much that it was estimated more than a half million fled from the Brown to the Red area—but the Soviet was conducting a campaign against some political leaders, such as Socialists.

Refugees reaching Kaunas said there were no signs of anti-Semitism in Soviet Poland, but added that the Jewish situation was grave because the Soviet authorities were confiscating property, machinery, materials and bank deposits. Community activities were said to be paralyzed and Jewish organizations no longer functioning.
