FROM: HENRY MONTOR

To expedite action I am herewith sending you, air mail special delivery, a draft of a memorandum to be forwarded to Mr. Norman Davis, Chairman of the Red Cross.

In addition to the material herewith attached, there is an 8-page memorandum drawn up by Rahaviah Lewin Epstein, describing transportation facilities. Not having copies of this at home, I have not sent it, but I can assure you it is a good piece of work.

If you have any corrections to make, could you telegraph or telephone me sometime on Monday? If I do not hear from you by the end of the day I shall assume that it is satisfactory to send off the material to Mr. Davis in your name.

You will note that you are prepared to meet with Mr. Davis. I believe that the matter involved, if it reaches the final stage, would be important enough to warrant a visit by you to Washington.

September 23, 1940

Mr. Norman Davis, Chairman

Dear Mr. Davis:

When Mr. Henry Montor, my assistant, met at Washington on September 9th with Mr. Ernest Swift and with Mr. Nicholson, to amplify the appeal I had addressed to you for extension by the American Red Cross of assistance to Palestine Jewry to enable it to meet its war relief and emergency problems, it was suggested that a written memorandum be submitted subsequently.

In accordance therewith, I am sending you a more detailed statement dealing with questions raised by Mr. Swift.

Since September 9th, the needs in Palestine have assumed new urgency. The bombing of Tel Aviv, great Jewish community of some 200,000 souls, with its wanton destruction of non-military objectives and scores of little children and young women, has sharply reminded us that in engaging in war the totalitarian powers are not deterred by any humanitarian impulse.

Because of the sacred character of Palestine and because of the constructive nature of the resettlement of hundreds of thousands of refugees seeking to escape persecution and extermination in European lands, the Jewish community there is especially unprepared for the hazards and the violence of warfare.

The American Red Cross, which symbolizes so admirably the will of America to succor innocent victims of war-time as well as peace-time disaster, can render an historic service in enabling the 500,000 Jews of Palestine to solve the extraordinary tasks confronting them as a result of the war.

These tasks include:

- (1) assistance for the evacuation of children from danger zones, their feeding and maintenance;
- (2) feeding of thousands of men, women and children refugees who have entered Palestine since the war began, using every means to escape from a continent in which a normal existence for Jews is swiftly becoming well-nigh impossible;
- (3) assistance to thousands of refugees who, landing on the shores of Palestine without visas, have been interned and subsequently released on the understanding they would not become public charges. Failure to meet that responsibility would thrust these hapless people into incalculable dangers;
- (4) assistance to men, women and children stranded in various European centers, who are now on their way to Palestine and will be utterly without means on their arrival;

September 23, 1940

- (5) all forms of medical aid for a population removed from normal centers of residence; for victims, adult and child, of bombings; for evacuees; and to meet the problems of sanitation and health that are dangerously peculiar to war.

The attached memorandum deals with two questions:

- (a) the requirements of supplies and
- (b) the means of transportation

During his conversation with Mr. Montor, Mr. Swift referred to the ratio of costs of shipping to costs of the supplies themselves. It is natural that costs should have risen, but I feel confident that if aid is necessary and if masses of human beings are in peril, the Red Cross will not ^{halt} in its errands of mercy and healing because the costs of bringing help ^{are} higher than they might be in peace-time. The Red Cross is in a position which cannot be paralleled by any other body and, therefore, it is in a uniquely fortunate position to answer on behalf of the American people the plea for assistance which now comes to it from the Jewish community of Palestine.

Some of the needs herein described could be met through the shipment of supplies. Others might more conveniently be made available through the forwarding of funds. I know that the Red Cross will keep both factors in mind in dealing with this memorandum. On September 20th, I telegraphed to urge that an amount of one hundred thousand ($100,000) dollars be sent by the Red Cross to the Jewish Agency to permit it to cope with the emergency problems that had to be met immediately. Undoubtedly the most thoughtful consideration is being given to that request.

In view of the swiftness with which modern war moves and the promptness of action that is necessitated if a maximum number of people are to be saved from the hazards of the war, may I ask that as soon as this memorandum has been studied I may have an opportunity to meet with you.

Five hundred thousand Jews in Palestine, who have been striving to build a free, secure life in their homeland, are patiently and valiantly endeavoring to cope with war-time problems. The American people, who have so often through their Presidents and public and civic leaders as well as through Congress, expressed their sympathy with the rebuilding of the Jewish homeland in Palestine, can now in this hour of great need--manifest ~~the~~ ^{their} sympathy and good will through the beneficent intervention of the American Red Cross.

Very cordially yours,

Abba Hillel Silver

From: Henry Montor

Memorandum of a conference to discuss American Red Cross aid for Palestine, at Red Cross headquarters, 17th Street, Washington, D. C.

Friday, September 27, 1940; time of interview: 11:00-11:45 a.m.

Present: Norman H. Davis, Chairman, Ernest J. Swift, Vice-Chairman, American Red Cross; Edmund I. Kaufmann, Rabbi Isidor Breslau, Henry Montor.

After an exchange of pleasantries, Mr. Davis stated that the Red Cross had engaged in discussions with the State Department, following receipt of Dr. Silver's messages asking Red Cross aid for Palestine. The State Department had pointed out that it was necessary to avoid embarrassment to the British Government in distinguishing between Jews and Arabs. In fact, the Arabs in Haifa had suffered more than the Jews in Tel Aviv. The resolution of that difficulty was now engaging the Red Cross. They had cabled to Mr. George Wadsworth, American Consul General, and the latter had already replied that he had met with Jewish Agency officials to discuss the situation.

Mr. Montor pointed out that in Haifa 60% of the population were Jews, and that if there were relief needs there the Jews and Arabs alike were affected. However, there was no desire to discriminate between Jews and Arabs. There was appreciation of the needs of Arabs as well as Jews.

Insofar as the Jewish community is concerned, it is well organized. It is represented by the Jewish Agency which can call upon established facilities. There was a body like Hadassah which had the experience, personnel and equipment to deal with emergency problems. However, the Arabs were not organized on the same lines, so that Mr. Wadsworth would probably have to deal with a number of organizations or individuals.

Mr. Davis said that he appreciated the cooperative discussion with Rabbi Silver, who had indicated his full understanding of the position of the Red Cross in that it must extend aid to all peoples of a country in which it operated.

Mr. Kaufmann said he was astonished, pleasantly astonished, by the sympathetic attitude taken toward the Palestine needs. The Jews had always taken care of their own and were not frequently given sympathetic consideration for their problems. He was delighted now to have this new experience of a cordial discussion of Jewish needs and offer of help.

Mr. Davis remarked that the Jews were known to take care of their own, and therefore people generally felt that the only ones to be helped were others than Jews. Thus the Jews by establishing a reputation for themselves of taking care of their own, dissuaded others from taking an interest in their problems.

Mr. Swift said that the memorandum of Palestine needs submitted by Dr. Silver was very excellent and unusual. The Red Cross officials were studying it thoroughly.

Mr. Davis said that the principal problems facing the Red Cross was how to give the aid, and yet not establish distinctions between groups. Later on, he remarked that two days ago he had discussed the situation with the President to tell him that the Red Cross was planning to purchase supplies for Palestine from the $50,000,000 fund voted by the Congress, the supplies to be available to Jews and Arabs both. The President approved.

Mr. Davis wondered why Tel Aviv had been bombed.

Mr. Montor said that Tel Aviv had some 200,000 Jews, with no military objectives except the spirit of the Jews. Tel Aviv represented the constructive enterprise of the Jewish people. It was, therefore, a target for Italians and Germans.

Mr. Davis had thought as much. He knew what a fine achievement Tel Aviv was.

Mr. Montor said that Dr. Magnes, noted American, ("Yes, a fine man", interjected Mr. Davis) in Palestine, had suggested that a Red Cross unit come to Palestine to survey the situation. We had only one purpose: to describe the needs in Palestine. It was for the Red Cross to determine the method. We wanted to cooperate in any program best fitted to Red Cross requirements. A Red Cross unit in Palestine would undoubtedly be welcomed.

There was an immediate emergency situation. Perhaps it could be met if funds were cabled to Mr. Wadsworth. Insofar as the Jews are concerned, the Jewish Agency could be used for its distribution. As regards the Arabs, Mr. Wadsworth would find the channels to use most effectively. The Red Cross unit after it made a survey of the needs later, would know best how to proceed thereafter.

Rabbi Breglau asked if there was any Red Cross agent in Europe who could be sent quickly to Palestine.

Mr. Davis said they had been thinking along these lines. There was somebody in Marseilles or Geneva who might be sent. He was glad to see that the idea of a Red Cross unit was desired. He inquired whether there was a Red Cross in Palestine.

Mr. Montor replied that there was a British Red Cross Society in Palestine, but its main object was to raise funds for British needs abroad. The same was true of the Order of St. John.

Mr. Kaufmann commented on the fine things being done by the Quakers.

Mr. Davis remarked that the Red Cross had done much more for the Jewish people, although it couldn't speak about it. It had spent $250,000 in Poland for Jews. The Poles in America were raising most of the money; after some months they came to the Red Cross and said they knew aid was being given to the Jews and Poles alike in Poland. Were the Jews doing anything? Mr. Davis spoke to Paul Baerwald, and said the Red Cross was being embarrassed, although the American Poles had been very nice in their attitude. The JDC had then contributed $50,000 to the Red Cross.

Mr. Kaufmann said he had spoken to Baerwald and Hyman a few days ago, and they had said the JDC was stymied. They could not operate in any of those countries, nor could the Red Cross.

That was true, said Mr. Davis.

Mr. Swift remarked with a laugh, that the JDC had given $50,000 to the Red Cross. Now the Red Cross was turning around and planning to give substantial sums to Palestine.

Mr. Montor asked if Mr. Davis knew George Vauchers of the International Red Cross of Geneva, who was now in Palestine.

Neither Mr. Davis nor Mr. Swift recalled the name, but said they might think of utilizing his services.

Rabbi Breslau felt that a Red Cross representative would be better able to judge the needs than Mr. Wadsworth, who had many other duties.

Mr. Kaufmann, too, said that Mr. Wadsworth might not be able to judge the situation fully.

Mr. Montor said that an organization like Hadassah typified the American attitude toward Palestine's needs. Its facilities had always been available to Arabs, as well as Jews. It had helped the health of the whole country. It had helped lower the Arab infant mortality rate.

Mr. Davis thought that perhaps a Jewish organization might even be able to look after some of the Arab needs, because it had the experience and the organization which the Arabs lacked.

Mr. Montor asked if the $25,000 referred to by Mr. Davis in his telegram to Dr. Silver had already been cabled to Mr. Wadsworth.

No, it hadn't, because a statement was awaited from Mr. Wadsworth, who was trying to work out the Arab angle. The money would be cabled in a few hours after Mr. Wadsworth asked for it.

Rabbi Breslau remarked that the Red Cross was taking on a larger task than it may have originally anticipated. The memorandum of needs that had been submitted was for purely Jewish needs. If the Arab population was to be considered, much more substantial aid would be required.

Mr. Kaufmann said that his firm had contributed $4,000 to the Red Cross. He was not mentioning this in any way as a basis of discussion, but merely to remark that right after the Red Cross campaign was through he had had to concern himself, as did other Jews, with the Palestine problem. The American Jews gave not only for their own, but for every worthy cause. They could not do more.

Mr. Davis recognized that. The Red Cross was ready to help as much as possible considering of course that it would have to deal with the whole of Palestine.

Mr. Montor inquired what the next step was.

Mr. Davis said the Red Cross was in touch with Mr. Wadsworth. It would await his advice and then get in touch with us immediately.

Mr. Swift said that even if a Red Cross unit went to Palestine, it would use the agencies already in existence there.

Mr. Montor asked if he could summarize the discussion: that the Red Cross, in recognition of the immediate emergency, needs, and in view of the slowness of transport of supplies, would cable ample funds to Mr. Wadsworth, to be distributed through the Jewish Agency for Jewish requirements, and through such Arab sources as Mr. Wadsworth might determine; and (2) that the Red Cross was planning to ship supplies to Palestine, and that it might send a Red Cross unit to Palestine to survey and administer the needs or might decide on some other procedure.

Mr. Davis said that was correct. The Red Cross realized that money would be needed before supplies could arrive, and was prepared to act accordingly as soon as Mr. Wadsworth gave the word. Perhaps Mr. Wadsworth might use Jewish agencies to help distribute aid to the Arabs, or he might form a relief committee on which Jews and Arabs would be represented. That might prove very helpful to the Jews themselves.

The Red Cross was very sympathetic to the Jewish refugee problem. In Europe it had been so loaded with political dynamite that it could do nothing. It was a problem for governments.

Mr. Montor thought it important to point out that all Jewish groups interested in Palestine supported the memorandum that had been submitted. Jews were often charged with unity, but it was rarely true. In this instance, it was.

Mr. Davis didn't think that even anti-Zionists would object to the Red Cross giving the requested aid. And even if they did, the Red Cross wouldn't care, Rabbi Breslau said the anti-Zionists were an extinct breed.

Mr. Kaufmann said he was sure the J.D.C. would approve the action. He was a director of the J.D.C., and also President of the Zionist Organization of America, and thus symbolized the attitude of both groups.

As the meeting was concluding, Mr. Montor said that Dr. Silver had asked him to convey his cordial personal regards to Mr. Davis.

Mr. Davis was happy to receive them. He thought very highly of Dr. Silver. He remembered with gratitude the favor that Dr. Silver had done the Red Cross last May, when he addressed it. He thought that he had rarely heard such a classic utterance.

Mr. Swift said that he would keep in touch with Mr. Montor, and was glad to know from Rabbi Breslau that the latter had an office in the city.

MINUTES OF A MEETING OF A SUB-COMMITTEE OF THE PALESTINE EMERGENCY COMMITTEE TO DEAL WITH THE RED CROSS, HELD AT THE OFFICES OF THE UNITED PALESTINE APPEAL, 41 EAST 42 STREET, NEW YORK.

Wednesday, October 9, at four p.m.

Present: Rabbi Isador Breslau, Rehabiah Lewin-Epstein, Henry Montor.
No representative of Hadassah attended, nor was an excuse offered for the absence.

There was presented to the meeting a copy of the Memorandum which had been drawn up by Mr. Montor on the conferences which Rabbi Breslau and he had had on Tuesday, October 8, with Norman H. Davis and Ernest Swift of the American Red Cross, and with Messrs. Murray, Childs and Alling of the Near East Division of the State Department, at Washington.

It was agreed that no further action could be taken at this time, insofar as the Red Cross is concerned. It was agreed, however, that Rabbi Breslau should meet with Mr. Justice Brandeis, who is a friend of Mr. A. A. Berle of the State Department, in whose hands formally rests the problem of the near eastern relations.

It was decided to send a cable to Mr. Eliezer Kaplan, hinting to him of the necessity of action in Jerusalem, which cable read as follows:

"KAPLAN JEWISH AGENCY JERUSALEM OCTOBER 9, 1940.

MEMORANDUM

October 10, 1940.

To: HM

From: SSW

Thanks so much for sending me the memorandum of your conversation with the State Department.

Murray is one of our subtlest and most dangerous foes. We will never have a square deal in the Near East until Murray goes. If there were any intelligence among American Jews -- and, of course, there is not; and, least of all, among American Zionists -- we would demand now that Mr. Murray have a Jewish coadjutor in the Near East department. Whether the State Department would give such a man four or five thousand a year, I do not know; but he should be subsidized by us as Oscar Straus was subsidized, when first he went to Turkey, by a group of rich Jews. Even Germany thirty years ago had a Jew in its Foreign Office. The exclusion of Jews from the State Department is a shameful condition - not to say a crime. We ought to fight for it, and fight vigorously, as we know how to fight when we really care for something.

Murray is the arbiter of our fate, and the Wadsworths are his creatures and under his tutelage. We ought to make -- Lipsky, Silver, Goldman, Kaufmann and I -- a stiff fight until we get a worthwhile Jew into the State Department to act on all Jewish questions, he to be the first to be consulted, and then he, in turn, to consult with us.

From: Henry Montor

Memorandum of a telephone conversation between Henry Montor and Mr. Ernest J. Swift, Vice-Chairman of the American Red Cross

Wednesday, October 2, 1940, at 11:45 A. M.

Mr. Swift telephoned from Washington, D. C. to report on a discussion that had been had between Mr. Davis and himself on a cablegram received from Mr. George Wadsworth, American Consul General in Jerusalem. Mr. Wadsworth reported to the Red Cross on an interview which he had had with the Secretary of the Palestine Government.

The Secretary is reported to have said to Mr. Wadsworth that the situation in Tel Aviv and Haifa was not of such emergency character as to require assistance from outside, for the needs of those affected by the bombings of the two municipalities have already been provided by the social welfare organizations of the two cities. This was illustrated by gifts of £500 each by Hadassah and by the Tel Aviv municipality.

The Secretary continued to the effect that the government was preparing a scheme for the payment of compensation to civilian victims.

There was no Palestine Red Cross, but the British Red Cross and the Order of St. John had made grants of £500 each in Tel Aviv and Haifa.

In the light of this telegram, Mr. Swift said, Mr. Davis had wished to talk to Mr. Edmund I. Kaufmann or Rabbi Isador Breslau in Washington. However, neither was in the city; therefore Mr. Swift called me in New York City.

The proposal which Mr. Davis was inclined to make was on the following lines:

A. That the American Red Cross send $10,000 to Mr. Wadsworth for distribution through local committees in Palestine.

B. That the American Red Cross make an outright contribution of $10,000 to be forwarded to Mr. Silver, for distribution by him in Palestine as he thought necessary.

Mr. Swift asked my suggestions on these proposals.

I indicated to him that the attitude of the Secretary of the Palestine Government reflected two situations which must be taken into account by the American Red Cross.

1. That the Government, as indicated in the original memorandum which we submitted to the American Red Cross, had not felt it necessary to fulfill its full share of responsibility for the social welfare and emergency needs of the population of Palestine.
2. That undoubtedly the Palestine Government, like any Government engaged in war, was inclined to minimize the consequences of the war on its population. Apparently an admission that Palestine needs large additional funds for supplies might be taken as a confession of weakness in the conduct of the war. However, the Red Cross could surely not take into account such purely political and extraneous considerations, when the lives and welfare of human beings were involved.

I could offer no specific comment as to whether the proposals made by Mr. Davis were appropriate. This was rather for the Red Cross to say. It ~~was~~ understood the situation, and had before it a memorandum of the requirements.

I did, however, again urge upon Mr. Swift the despatch by the American Red Cross of an emissary or unit to Palestine, so that this authoritative representative could make a survey of his own to determine what the actual requirements in Palestine are. This would certainly offer more expert material than was provided in the conversation between the Secretary of the Palestine Government and Mr. Wadsworth.

I told Mr. Swift that before offering comment on the proposals, I would communicate with Dr. Silver and call him back. It was at this point that Mr. Swift suggested that Mr. Davis would telephone Dr. Silver in Cleveland to get his observations directly.

* * * * *

The above represents the gist of the conversation which I had with Mr. Swift. It was very clear, however, that Mr. Swift had not read the entire contents of what must have been a very lengthy cablegram from Mr. Wadsworth. It was evident from the manner in which Mr. Swift had spoken that the Secretary of the Palestine Government, on the one hand, and Mr. Wadsworth, on the other, had made it clear to the American Red Cross that the provision of large scale assistance to Palestine was not required or desired.

At the same time, the Red Cross had already entered into a commitment, in its dealings with Dr. Silver, that $25,000 would be immediately appropriated for the Tel Aviv needs. Apparently Mr. Davis and Mr. Swift felt that the position of the Red Cross would be embarrassed if these original commitments were not carried through.

It is evident that the cabled report from Mr. Wadsworth has caused serious misgivings at the American Red Cross, which was prepared to give large-scale assistance, as evidenced in (a) written correspondence with Dr. Silver; (b) telephone conversations with Dr. Silver and Mr. Montor; and (c) in conversations held in the offices of the American Red Cross in Washington between Messrs. Davis and Swift and Messrs. E. I. Kaufmann, Isador Breslau and Henry Montor.

Whatever subsequent action the American Red Cross may take will be dependent upon two factors:

1. Further reports from Mr. Wadsworth
2. Reports from American Red Cross representatives who may be sent to Palestine for a survey of the situation.

I believe that it is fair not merely to infer but to state that Mr. Wadsworth's lukewarm, if not hostile, attitude, may jeopardize if not estrange the provision of American Red Cross assistance to Palestine, both to Jews and Arabs.

From: Henry Montor

A memorandum on a conversation of Rabbi Isador Breslau and Henry Montor with (a) Norman Davis, Chairman of the American Red Cross, and Ernest Swift, Vice Chairman and (b) with Messrs. Murray Alling and Childs of the Near Eastern Division of the U.S. State Department, Tuesday, October 8, 1940 - Washington, D.C.

A. - With American Red Cross

As the result of a telephone conversation between Mr. Swift and Mr. Montor on the afternoon of October 7, Mr. Montor was asked to come to Washington the following day to receive a personal explanation of the difficulties surrounding the extension of Red Cross aid to Palestine. The subject was presented on the evening of October 7, to the Emergency Committee for Zionist Affairs by Dr. Silver. At the close of that evening Mr. Montor invited Rabbi Breslau to accompany him to Washington. He also invited Mrs. David de Sola Pool, President of Hadassah. Mrs. Pool discussed the problem with Mrs. Rose Jacobs, Mrs. Rebecca Shulman, and Mrs. Schoolman. They invited Mrs. Rose Halpern to go to Washington to represent Hadassah. But no representative of Hadassah came to Washington for the interviews hereinafter described.

From 12:20 P.M. to 1:15 P.M., Messrs Breslau and Montor met with Messrs. Davis and Swift at the Red Cross Building.

Mr. Davis reviewed the steps taken since the receipt of a memorandum on Palestine needs from Dr. Silver and of a telegram asking for cash funds in the interim. The Red Cross, moved by the human equation, had responded promptly. But, later, in consulting the State Department it found itself involved in unforeseen difficulties.

Mr. Swift had previously read from the text of an opinion which had apparently been submitted to the Red Cross by the State Department. This memorandum described the interview of U.S. Consul Wadsworth of Jerusalem with the Chief Secretary of the Palestine Government. In the first place, the needs were not such as to require outside aid. In the second place, far more ramified issues were involved. Alexandria, too, had been bombed. The place of Egypt in the Near Eastern equilibrium was a vital consideration. Moreover, there was Arab opinion to be considered in Iraq, Yemen and Saudi Arabia. There was even word of the restlessness of Ibn Saud. Considering the desire of the U.S. Government to do nothing that would unbalance an already delicate situation in the Near East, the Red Cross was cautioned to proceed slowly.

In view of this opinion of the State Department, the Red Cross was in a quandary.

It was evident from Mr. Davis' manner and words that he was embarrassed. He had sent a precipitate telegram to Dr. Silver and now, as he put it, he was "out on a limb".

Rabbi Breslau stated that there was an understanding of the Red Cross position. Mr. Davis need not feel bound by the telegram he had sent. If the circumstances were such as to forbid action, that would be appreciated. Perhaps the best thing to do for the time being would be to let the matter of an immediate remittance stand in suspense until there was further clarification. He again urged that the Red Cross send its own representative to Palestine to study the situation. It could then determine Arab and Jewish needs.

Mr. Montor reiterated some of the points he made at the previous session with the Red Cross. There were two points to be considered: (1) was help needed in Palestine? (2) should extraneous political considerations determine the question?

There was of course, concern with the Palestine community. But transcending that was our desire to meet the wishes of the American Government. We believed that help was needed. It was reflected in the memorandum that had been submitted to the Red Cross. But we did not ask that that be considered the last word. Let the impartial investigation of the Red Cross determine the situation. Mr. Davis had remarked that Alexandria had suffered scores of bombings and the need there was much greater. Was the situation really comparable? Egypt had a government which could levy assessments for the social welfare of its citizens. In Palestine, some 300,000 of the Jewish community had entered in the last 7 years. The Government had not assumed its full obligations. They themselves had limited means. They had to depend on the Jewish people outside to help them meet emergency needs.

In the extended discussion that followed it quickly became evident that the Red Cross had been given definite instructions by the State Department to take no action in the matter. Rabbi Breslau, during a discussion of the relationship between the Red Cross and the U.S. Government, asked a hypothetical question. If the State Department decided as a political measure in relation to Japan that aid now being extended to China by the Red Cross should be withdrawn, even if the Red Cross felt it necessary to give such aid, would the Red Cross be bound by the State Department views? Mr. Davis said yes. The Red Cross is actually an arm of the government and must respond to its political necessities.

Again and again, Mr. Davis said that he was "on the defensive". He could not get it out of his mind that he had given his word to Dr. Silver and could not redeem it, because he was "stymied". He was assured that he need have no bad conscience in the matter.

Mr. Davis said that the Red Cross had eagerly welcomed the opportunity to do something in Palestine. For years it had wanted to do something for the refugees in Europe - but the problem had assumed governmental proportions. At last a chance to express itself seemed at hand - but even this was apparently to be surrounded with difficulties.

Rabbi Breslau then remarked that it had been felt that since the State Department had been referred to, it might be valuable to get the viewpoint of the State Department and ask its cooperation.

This was eagerly welcomed by Messrs. Davis and Swift. Rabbi Breslau said that an appointment had been arranged for that afternoon.

The session was closed with an expression of appreciation by Mr. Davis of the cooperative attitude that had been evidenced in understanding of the Red Cross position.

B. With State Department

On the morning of October 8, Rabbi Breslau arranged a meeting for 2:30 that afternoon with Mr. Wallace S. Murray, Chief of the Near East Division of the State Department.

When Rabbi Breslau and Mr. Montor arrived, there were also present J. Rives Childs, head of the section on Egypt, and Paul H. Alling, Assistant to the Chief of the Near East Division.

The position, as stated by Mr. Murray throughout an hour and a half session, was substantially as follows:

The American Government was concerned with the position of the British Government in the Near East. It was recognized that this was one of the critical arenas of war. The capture of Suez could be regarded as second only to the invasion of England itself in its effect on the British Empire.

It was recognized that the Moslems were an uncertain element. No one knew which way Egypt would go. It had not to date indicated full adherence to the British cause. Under these conditions, any action affecting the Near East must be considered most carefully.

It could not be forgotten, for example, that at the time of the London Conference, Ibn Saud had written a letter to President Roosevelt saying that America had not understood or sympathized with the Arab aspirations. The Arabs had expected more appreciation from the American democracy of their desire to rule their own countries.

The latest reports now indicated that Ibn Saud was being swayed to Hitler. It was interesting to note that only recently St. John Philby adviser to Ibn Saud, had been interned in India.

A gift to Palestine by the Red Cross might be misinterpreted. This point was especially emphasized by Mr. Childs, who said that Egypt had suffered far more. Some 250,000 people had had to be evacuated from the Alexandria area. A contribution to Palestine at this time would cause serious repercussions.

Mr. Murray continued by saying that the Red Cross had sent only $5,000 to Turkey when 40,000 people had been killed in an earthquake. Would it not be "out of focus" to give substantial aid to Palestine when its neighbor, Egypt, far more seriously affected, was not being considered in a Red Cross program?

The State Department had cabled to Cairo to learn what the position is in Egypt with respect to needs. It had advised the Red Cross not to take any further action until that time.

Mr. Montor reviewed for Mr. Murray the steps leading up to the present status. He emphasized that the bombing of Tel Aviv was not what had evoked the appeal to the Red Cross, a misconception under which he seemed to be laboring. Dr. Silver, many months ago, had addressed himself to the President, when consideration was being given by Congress to an appropriation of $50,000,000 for relief abroad. The President had directed Dr. Silver to the Red Cross. There then followed correspondence and conversations which reached a climax in the submission of a memorandum of requirements. Throughout it had been indicated that although we could speak only for the Jewish community of Palestine, we understood the position of the Red Cross with respect to provision for all elements of the population. Not only did we not object; we approved.

But now political considerations had been raised. Whatever the State Department declared was to the best interest of our Government would, naturally, be our guide for action. However, certain factors might be kept in mind. A great portion of the Jews of Palestine were new immigrants. They had to depend on the outside Jewish world for assistance in emergencies. The Palestine Government had never fully assumed its responsibilities for the social welfare needs of the country, either for Jews or Arabs. Since we were not pressing the plea for aid as an exclusively Jewish enterprise but were asking that the Red Cross survey the total needs of the population, were the objections valid?

The United States Government was interested in the position of the British Government in the Near East. Ought not a long-range consideration of the facts keep the following in mind: that there were two factors, the Arab population--a variable, and the Jewish population, a constant. The Jews were unreservedly with Britain and, regardless of past differences, the Jews of Palestine understood the necessities of British political action though they might not perhaps agree to the wisdom of certain steps considered necessary. Since the Arab element was regarded as unstable and uncertain, was it wise to permit the weakening of the Jews who could constitute a bulwark of strength for the British? The Jews had volunteered for army service to the limit of allowance. They were prepared to offer a number of divisions if the Government would accept them. There was unemployment in Palestine, with almost 100,000 people affected. It would be desirable to prevent demoralization by assisting that community in this critical period. The memorandum submitted to the Red Cross dealt with the broad problems arising out of war and not merely incidentals of bombing, Mr. Montor said.

But the Chief Secretary of the Palestine Government, Mr. Murray declared, has stated that $25,000 sent to Palestine at this time by the Red Cross would be far too generous in relation to the actual needs. The Palestine Government was taking all proper steps.

Mr. Murray continued that the Red Cross would have to consider its obligations to the Near East as a whole. If it sent $25,000 to Palestine, how much would it have to send to Egypt, for example, where the need was really so much wider? To rush into aid for one community, considering the delicate problem of Arab relations with the British Government, would not at all be helpful.

Moreover, were the Jews of Palestine in such need? Regardless of the difficulties that immigrants had in getting to Palestine, regardless of the circumstances that faced them when they reached the country weren't they much better off than the Jews of Europe or the people who had to hide in squalid cellars to escape bombing? "Spoken like a Zionist", Mr. Montor remarked, in tribute to Mr. Murray's eloquent statement of the improved position of Jews in Palestine as compared to Europe. Mr. Murray grinned.

After all, the bombing in Tel Aviv was negligible in comparison with the daily bombings in London, Mr. Murray remarked. Mr. Montor said that the Jews were not unconcerned with the bombings in London. Incidentally, the Jews there too had had their share, since a great many of the bombs had fallen in the East End where many Jews lived. Mr. Murray thought there were not many Jews in England to be affected. Mr. Montor said that there were 300,000 Jews in England, a majority of whom lived in London.

Mr. Murray said that the entire problem was being handled by Mr. A. A. Berle, Assistant Secretary of State. He was now in touch with Cairo. It was his feeling that the Egyptian situation was so critical that nothing should be done to upset it.

In any event, Mr. Murray asked, was not the need of the Jews in Europe greater? How could there be a concern with the much smaller group of Jews in Palestine?

Rabbi Breslau pointed out that it was difficult, if not impossible, for any of the organizations, including the Red Cross, to operate in Continental Europe. Nevertheless, the Red Cross had not stopped operating in other lands merely because circumstances did not permit to operate in one section of the world. The same situation confronted the Jews. They were certainly greatly concerned about the plight of millions of Jews in Europe. They were trying to extend whatever aid was possible. But merely because they were estopped from doing a maximum in Europe was no reason why they should not give aid to Palestine, where it was possible to work. Moreover, in working for Palestine, the Jews were making a definite contribution to the easement of the Jewish plight in Europe.

Rabbi Breslau continued to the effect that much had been made of the needs of other countries in the Near East. If Mr. Murray would urge and encourage the Red Cross to send a representative to Palestine he could also go into Egypt or elsewhere and study the needs. Mr. Murray had said that the appeal for aid for Palestine had first brought to a head the whole question of assistance for the Near East. The Jews on their part would feel happy if any action of theirs would bring assistance to other groups; thus, perhaps even the Egyptians might benefit from the action that had been initiated by the Zionists here.

But Mr. Childs felt that aid to Palestine would be misconstrued. Just as the giving of aid to Jews and not Arabs in Palestine would arouse resentment, so the granting of assistance to Palestine would have repercussions in neighboring lands.

Mr. Montor reiterated that no objection was being entered to the giving of aid to all groups and peoples which needed it. It was rather unfortunate, however, that the Jews of Palestine were being penalized doubly. First they were penalized when they were expelled from Europe solely because they were Jews. Now they were being penalized when aid could be extended to them in Palestine but was being withheld because they were Jews.

The Red Cross would have to go slowly and get a picture of the total situation in the Near East, Mr. Murray said. It was important for Palestine itself that the Egyptian situation be protected. If there was any fighting to be done, the attack would be on Egypt and on Alexandria. If morale was to be sustained, that of the Egyptians would seem to come first, particularly when it was remembered that the attitude of the Arabs to begin with needed encouragement and stimulation. Their tendency to the Italian or German Governments had to be counteracted.

Speaking on the subject of Arab-Jewish relations, which Mr. Murray said had long been a source of concern, Mr. Montor said that some years ago when it was being said that the incitement of the Arabs in Palestine was due largely to German and Italian agents this was written off as chauvinist Zionist propaganda. Now that the Germans and Italians had been expelled or interned, the hostilities had subsided. The bombings had done much to bring Jews and Arabs closer together, in understanding of their common danger.

Mr. Murray felt that the presence of British troops was probably responsible for the decline of the terrorism in Palestine. Mr. Montor did not agree. After all, there had been a great many soldiers brought in during the disturbances. The British deserted many points in the face of terrorist activity. It was Jewish supernumeraries who played an important part in suppressing the terrorism.

Commenting on the military situation in Palestine, Mr. Childs said that he had had information only last week that there were now less than 30,000 British soldiers in Palestine. The rest had been moved up to Egypt, where the British still numbered less than the Italians.

Was the British Government as such offering objections to the giving of aid to Palestine, Mr. Montor asked. The Secretary of the Palestine Government had clearly indicated the position to Mr. Wadsworth in Jerusalem, Mr. Murray replied. Mr. Wadsworth was an experienced officer who had a great deal of sympathy for the situation.

Rabbi Breslau indicated that in view of the observations made by the State Department, the sending of money to Palestine at this time might be waived, pending a more thorough report by the Red Cross. He urged that Mr. Murray encourage the Red Cross to dispatch its emissary to Palestine for an investigation.

The conversation continued along this line for the rest of the interview, with repetitions and embroideries of the points of view above described. It was clear, however, that it was felt by the three officers of the State Department that, on the basis of present information at any rate, the extension of aid to Palestine was neither desired nor wise.

Mr. Murray closed the meeting by saying that he was awaiting clarifying word from Cairo and that, afterwards, a decision on the problem might be made.

As the meeting was breaking up, there were a few moments of personal chit-chat, during which Mr. Murray inquired about the new leadership in the American Zionist Organization. He seemed familiar with the fact that there had been changes. He asked if Dr. Wise had taken an "honorary" post, Rabbi Breslau remarked that Dr. Wise was not the man to take an "honorary" post at any time.

October 24, 1940

My dear Mr. Montor:

I have received your letter of October 21, 1940, and regret that there appears to have been some misunderstanding with regard to letting you know the result of our communication with the Legation in Cairo concerning Red Cross relief in the Near East.

We have received a reply to our telegraphic inquiry of the Legation in Cairo, and a paraphrase of it was made available to the Red Cross under date of October 17. As any action to be taken on the telegram would properly emanate from the Red Cross, we had assumed that the Red Cross would communicate with you.

I hope that this letter will suffice to clear up any misunderstanding, and the better to assure that end I am making available to the Red Cross copies of your communication to me and of this communication.

With kind regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

Dear Rabbi Silver:

I regret there has been a necessary delay in reaching a decision in regard to a grant of funds to assist in relief of the victims of recent air raids in the city of Tel Aviv, Palestine. Fortunately the pressing needs, so we are informed, have been cared for by the effective assistance of the Jewish agencies and the officials of the municipality.

It is difficult to know just how to deal with the situation which you have brought to our attention. Although the pressing need in Tel Aviv has at present been taken care of the outlook in the Near East is rather gloomy and with the development of military action in that area we may shortly face a very great and a very real problem. In the meantime, we are endeavoring, through the State Department, to keep informed of developments with a view of determining how best to render assistance if and when the occasion arises. Under the circumstances, I am sure you will agree with me that it is better to withhold any grant until it is possible to see more clearly just what should be done, and how best to do it.

Very sincerely yours,

Mr. Norman H. Davis, Chairman

 Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Davis:

This will acknowledge your letter of October 29th with reference to the situation in Palestine.

I must say to you in all frankness that I have not been able to understand the position taken by the State Department with respect to assistance to be given to Palestine. I cannot comprehend how anyone could object to the extension of assistance to a community in need, particularly when it is emphasized that the distribution of aid is on a non-sectarian and non-political basis.

Yesterday I received a cable from Mr. Eliezer Kaplan, Treasurer of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, which is the supreme representative of the Jewish people in the upbuilding of the Jewish homeland, who reported on a visit which he had with the Chief Secretary of the Palestine Government and with Mr. Wadsworth, the American Consul General at Jerusalem.

The Chief Secretary of the Palestine Government informed Mr. Kaplan that he had been approached by Mr. Wadsworth only with respect to the relief victims of the past air raids. He had replied that this contingency was already met, but added that "the Government would welcome relief for the general distress."

You will recall that in the memorandum submitted to the Red Cross with respect to the assistance that might be given to the Palestine population, the air raids were a negligible incident in the total description of needs. Rather, there was the presentation of the larger picture involving the general distress incident to war, caused by external and internal factors.

You will be interested to learn that Mr. Wadsworth advised Mr. Kaplan that on September 27th he had cabled to the State Department of the United States and had said in part:

October 30, 1940

"Palestine Jewry is faced with a real financial emergency in its efforts to meet various war-born problems, the absorption of indigent refugees and unemployment resulting from economic dislocation as well as those of air raid precautions, possible urban evacuation, medical aid and direct relief for air raid victims."

The views of the Chief Secretary of the Palestine Government and of Mr. Wadsworth, as described in this cable from Mr. Kaplan, bear out the point of view that we have endeavored during these weeks to make available to you.

In his cable to me Mr. Kaplan emphasizes that there are "larger issues" involved insofar as relief of distress is concerned than intermittent air raids. Substantial sections of the Jewish and Arab populations have been severely affected by a variety of factors arising out of the war. Among the Jews the position has been aggravated by the presence of considerable numbers of wartime refugees, Mr. Kaplan emphasizes.

It is to be regretted that political considerations have been injected into a purely humanitarian issue. It seems to me that the extent of the aid required is a problem that can easily be determined by an examination on the spot by a representative of the Red Cross. That we have urged consistently.

May I suggest another early meeting to go more thoroughly into the issues involved? I do not think that we have any grounds for delay based merely on information that does not seem to be corroborated by an inquiry in Jerusalem.

As you point out, the war is approaching closer to the Palestine front. Preparation now with the assistance of the Red Cross can avoid distress and disaster to the population of a country whose requirements have the sympathetic interest of all peoples. I am sure that the Red Cross, when the crisis in Palestine arises, will not wish it to be said that avoidable delay prevented its action in time.

Very cordially yours,

Abba Hillel Silver
National Chairman

Dear Mr. Swift:

We have received from Mr. Eliezer Kaplan of the Jewish Agency for Palestine in Jerusalem supplementary lists of the medicines and medical instruments of which the community is in great need. I am attaching hereto a copy for your information and, I hope, eventual action.

You will recall that at one of our early meetings you asked questions as to the functions of some of the local institutions in Palestine with respect to first aid work. I am sending you herewith a statement forwarded to us by the Jewish Agency, describing the functions and activities of the Magen David Adom, which performs the services which normally would be undertaken by the Red Cross.

In submitting to you the material on this particular branch of Palestine's needs, I must again emphasize that the total program in which we are concerned involves not merely relief arising out of bombings or other war incidents with which the Magen David Adom, or Hadassah, or other bodies might concern themselves, but with the far larger tasks of enabling the community, which consists of so large a number of refugees, to carry on during these critical days.

It is my earnest hope that the Red Cross will be able to give prompt consideration to the plea for the medical supplies and medicines referred to in the attached memoranda.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Magen David Adom (Red Shield), Palestine.

1. M.D.A. is the only Jewish first-aid organization in Palestine, and is officially recognized by Government and Jewish authorities. The organization is supervised by the Health Section of the Vaad Leumi (General Council of the Jewish Community of Palestine).

2. Local M.D.A. societies have been established in the following towns and larger colonies: Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, Haifa, Tiberias, Rechovot, Ramat Gan, Petach Tikva and Hedera. The local societies have regular first-aid stations equipped with ambulances, other means of transportation, and trained medical staff. Special M.D.A. buildings have been erected in Tel Aviv, Haifa and Rechovot. In Jerusalem there is a central first-aid station controlled jointly by the Hadassah Medical Organization and the M.D.A. Every local society has a volunteer organization, including properly trained physicians, nurses and orderlies. The total number of volunteers throughout the country is 2,000. Special groups of volunteer blood donors have been organized by the larger societies, and the members of these groups, all of whom have passed a blood examination, are ready for service in blood-transfusions at the first call.

3. During the recent disturbances (1936-9), the M.D.A. dealt with many thousands of cases of injured persons in all parts of the country with exceptional devotion and courage, irrespective of race or religion. The organization won the confidence and appreciation of Government and the public.

4. Upon the outbreak of war, all emergency duties usually devolving upon the Red Cross were assumed by M.D.A. All matters relating to first-aid, transport of wounded persons, and work in clearing stations in all Jewish urban and rural settlements were centred in M.D.A., in accordance with a plan agreed upon by Government and the Jewish authorities.

5. All services were extended and adapted to meet emergency needs. With the help of the Vaad Leumi and the Hadassah Medical Organization, additional equipment, such as stretchers, bandages and surgical supplies, was obtained. Owing to lack of ambulances, facilities were arranged in trucks to transport the wounded.

6. During the recent air-raid on Haifa and Tel Aviv, M.D.A. successfully fulfilled its duties, treating and transporting hundreds of wounded. Government expressed its deep appreciation to M.D.A., and the British Red Cross donated a special gift of LP. 500 to M.D.A. in Tel Aviv.

M.D.A. income is principally derived from private contributions, and last year totalled LP. 6000. This amount is very small in the light of increased emergency needs. Now that the war front is approaching the shores of Palestine, the urgent need for extension and equipment of M.D.A. services becomes apparent.

Needed immediately: 5 additional ambulances (present number of M.D.A. ambulances is 13), motor-cycles with stretchers, stretchers on wheels, bandaging material, medicaments and serums (anti-tetanus, anti-gangrene, narcotics), various surgical instruments and financial means to maintain the services.

The sum required to meet these needs is conservatively estimated at about LP. 5,000.

November 16, 1940

My dear Mr. Montor:

I wish to thank you for your letter of November 6, 1940, enclosing an exchange of correspondence between Mr. Davis and Rabbi Silver in regard to the question of a grant by the American Red Cross to the Jewish Agency for relief work in Palestine.

Upon receiving your letter we telegraphed Mr. Wadsworth, our Consul General in Jerusalem, that in a letter which Rabbi Silver had addressed to the Chairman of the American Red Cross the statement was made that he informed Mr. Eliezer Kaplan, Treasurer of the Jewish Agency, that on September 27 he had telegraphed the Department:

"Palestine Jewry is faced with a real financial emergency in its efforts to meet various war-born problems, the absorption of indigent refugees, and unemployment resulting from economic dislocation as well as those of air-raid precautions, possible urban evacuation, medical aid and direct relief for air-raid victims."

In as much as no such passage appears in the telegram which the Department received under that date from Mr. Wadsworth, the full text of which, as received by the Department, was furnished the Red Cross on September 30, Mr. Wadsworth was requested to telegraph the facts in order to enable us to comment on the statement.

The Department is now in receipt of a reply from Mr. Wadsworth, a copy of which is being made available to the Red Cross, from which it appears that the only portion of the text quoted by Rabbi Silver which was received by the Department in Mr. Wadsworth's telegram of September 27 was the phrase "evacuation, and, finally, medical aid and direct relief to air raid victims." This appeared as paragraph four of the telegram and was interpreted from the context as a subject heading rather than a portion of a paragraph, the previous text of which had been inadvertently omitted.

In conclusion, I note that there is some misconception on the part of Rabbi Silver in the sixth paragraph of his letter in attributing to me as a personal view an opinion, which I was at pains to explain to you on the occasion of your visit was one which represented the considered opinion of the Department. I may add that the opinion of the Department on the subject of the unfortunate political repercussions likely to follow the granting of American Red Cross assistance exclusively to Palestine at a time when almost the whole of the Near East is in the shadow of war is one which is shared by the Department's officers in the field who have been consulted. Nothing has been received in the meantime by the Department to change that view but, on the contrary, further additional information has been received which fortifies it.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Swift:

Thank you for your letter of November 14th which I have not been able to acknowledge earlier because of my absence from the city.

The question raised by Dr. Silver in his recent letter to Mr. Davis seemed to me of far-reaching significance. Inevitably questions must arise. I am confident that the splendid spirit of cooperation and sympathetic understanding which have characterized the attitude of Mr. Davis and yourself will be brought to bear on the representations that have been made by Dr. Silver.

Do you think a purpose would be served by my coming to Washington to discuss the subject further with Mr. Davis and yourself in the light of recent developments?

With kindest personal regards, I am

Cordially yours,

BRITAIN TO DEPORT 1,771 JEWS ENTERING PALESTINE ILLEGALLY

Jerusalem, November 22 (Palcor Agency) -- The Palestine Government announced yesterday that it is deporting 1,771 Jewish refugees fleeing Nazi Europe who entered Palestine illegally on two boats early this month. They will be sent to one of the British possessions.

The extraordinary action was publicized through an official communique broadcast over the Jerusalem radio. The Government announcement said:

"Early this month two steamers, carrying 1,771 Jewish passengers, were intercepted off the coast by a police patrol. The vessels were brought to Haifa Harbor. There is no doubt that these persons must be classed as illegal immigrants -- namely, that they are persons seeking entry into Palestine against the known law.

"His Majesty's Government do not lack sympathy for refugees from territories under German control but they are responsible for the Administration of Palestine and are bound to see that the laws are not openly flouted. Moreover, they can only regard the renewal of illegal Jewish immigration at the present juncture as likely to affect adversely the position of the country and to prove a serious menace to British interests in the Middle East.

"Accordingly, the Government have decided that the passengers and the steamers, Pacific and Mylos, will not be permitted to land in Palestine but will be deported to a British colony as soon as arrangements can be made for safe transport and accommodation there, where they will be detained for the duration of the war.

"Their ultimate disposal will be deferred for consideration until the end of the war; but it is not proposed that they remain in the British colony to which they will be sent or that they shall go back to Palestine. Similar action will be taken regarding further parties which succeed in reaching Palestine with a view to entering illegally."

It was rumored here that the British colony to which it is now proposed to deport the 1,771 illegal refugees caught off the Palestine shore is the island of Mauritius, about 500 miles east of Madagascar, which has frequently been referred to as the colony to which Hitler would consign Europe's Jews. Mauritius is 720 square miles in area and has a population of approximately 400,000.

AMERICAN RED CROSS WITHHELD PALESTINE AID ON BRITISH ADVICE

withheld relief at the advice of the British Government, it was revealed in the House of Commons yesterday, through a question raised by Geoffrey Mander, Liberal.

Clement Attlee, former Labor Opposition leader who is now Lord Privy Seal and a member of Prime Minister Churchill's inner War Cabinet, answering Mr. Mander's query as to why the Government had refused the assistance of the American Red Cross for the air-raid victims of Italian bombings in Tel Aviv and Haifa, stated that Mr. George Wadsworth, American Consul General at Jerusalem, had informed the Government of appeals that had been addressed to the American Red Cross for the relief of such victims and had inquired whether Red Cross funds should be diverted for use in Palestine.

In replying to Mr. Wadsworth, the Government had said that it appreciated the offer but it felt that as of that date the emergency did not warrant assistance from abroad, since the immediate needs of the victims and their dependents were provided by local organizations, supplemented by Government grants.

Answering Mr. Mander's further questions as to whether in the future sympathetic consideration would be given to outside assistance if the situation became worse, Mr. Attlee assured him that it would.

The possibility that American Red Cross offers of assistance had been rejected because of the frictions that might be developed between Jews and Arabs in Palestine was mooted by Mr. Mander. Commenting on Mr. Mander's demand that assurance be given that such was not the case, Mr. Attlee said that he had never heard of such a suggestion.

Another query with respect to Palestine was answered by Colonel Evans, Assistant Postmaster General, who stated that every effort was being made to expedite mail for Palestine.

The discussion in the House of Commons brought into the open one of the most sensational developments of relations between Palestine and the United States since World War II began. It is understood that Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, American-Jewish leader, had urged the American Red Cross to examine into the general requirements of Palestine related to all wartime and emergency problems, and not merely air raids. An immediate acceptance of the proposal by the Red Cross was later dropped, apparently as a result of advice from the American Consul General at Jerusalem.

Rumors arising out of the House of Commons debate were full of the charge that Mr. Wadsworth and officials of the United States Department of State had believed that acquiescence in Dr. Silver's proposal for emergency relief measures in Palestine would be construed as favoritism to Jews and be resented by Arabs. It was emphasized by Jewish leaders here, however, that Dr. Silver had specifically urged that assistance be distributed among Arabs and Jews alike, as the needs required.

The question raised in the House of Commons directed attention to the possibility that the American Red Cross, a humanitarian organization, was being utilized either by the British Govern-officials of the American Red Cross had themselves been most sympathetic but had been prevented from acting by outside pressure.

DR. WEIZMANN CALLS ON AMERICAN JEWS TO ENLARGE SUPPORT OF PALESTINE

London, November 22 (Palestine Agency) -- Declaring that in the future as in the past the fate of the Jewish people "will lie first of all in our own hands," Dr. Chaim Weizmann, President of the World Zionist Organization and the Jewish Agency for Palestine, addressed a message to American Jews in which he said that "the tragic necessities of the moment must not distract our attention from our ultimate goal, which is the full liberation of our people through the establishment of a Jewish National Home on a sound and enduring basis."

In the message, which he sent to the 1940 Yearbook of the United Palestine Appeal to be issued next Wednesday on the occasion of the seventh annual "Night of Stars," Dr. Weizmann called upon the Jews in the United States to increase their support of Palestine in a measure that will make up for the elimination of many European-Jewish communities from active participation in the rebuilding of the Jewish homeland.

The following is the text of Dr. Weizmann's appeal:

"Now more than ever before Palestine is the only center for the salvation of great masses of Jews and for the resurrection of the Jewish nation. American Jewry, the only great free Jewish community in the world, must now more than ever bear the burden of the major responsibility.

"Though we are fully confident of the ultimate victory of Great Britain and her allies, supported by the growing help of your great democracy, we must realize that the post-war Jewish problem will neither solve itself nor be solved by any political formula -- not even by the decency or good will of the Gentile nations, vital as these are. In the future, as in the past, the fate of our people will lie first of all in our own hands; and the tragic necessities of the moment must not distract our attention from our ultimate goal, which is the full liberation of our people through the establishment of a Jewish National Home on a sound and enduring basis.

"Our first duty with regard to Palestine today, therefore, is help to the Yishuv -- which heroically withstood years of attack and whose economic life has shown itself to be fundamentally sound and to possess great power of resistance -- in maintaining and developing its achievements even in time of war, so that after the conflict we may be able to continue and accelerate the upbuilding work in proportion to the need which lies clearly before us.

"I can assure you that we are not overlooking the problems connected with our future work. I am happy in the feeling that in this work I have the full understanding and co-operation of your leaders in America. But (Continued on Page 4) the lasting importance of any political achievement depends in the highest degree on the concrete foundations upon which it rests.

"During the past twenty years the Keren Hayesod, together with the other great national fund, the Keren Kayemeth, has made the most substantial contribution in laying firm foundations for our historic tasks. I trust that now when many Jewish communities, great and small, are against their will denied the privilege of taking part in our effort, those Jewries still free, especially the great American community, will know how to take over from them the additional burden and will rise to the full responsibilities of the hour."

JEWISH AGENCY EXECUTIVE DISAGREES WITH RUTENBERG, IT IS LEARNED

New York, November 22 (Palcor Agency) -- It was learned here from reliable sources today that the Executive of the Jewish Agency in Jerusalem was unaware of the program announced by Mr. Rutenberg and did not agree to it when it was made public.

It was also learned that the statement made by Mr. Rutenberg that the American-Jewish press should not interfere in Palestine affairs represented his personal views. It was reported that Mr. Rutenberg was not authorized by the Executive to make such a statement and that his views are neither shared nor supported by the Executive.

JEWISH NATIONAL FUND LAND PURCHASES

Total Land Possessions Now 518,200 Dunams

Jerusalem (Palcor Agency) -- During the first eleven months of 5700 -- from October 1, 1939 through August 31, 1940 -- the Jewish National Fund purchased land comprising an area of 32,502 dunams, or 84.5 per cent of the total 38,432 dunams bought by Jews generally in that period. In other words, only 5,930 dunams, or 15.5 per cent, were purchased privately. Yet about 5,000 dunams of the latter total was obtained through the Jewish National Fund by individuals.

During the first five months of the period -- that is, prior to the enactment of the new land legislation in February, 1940 -- purchases amounted to 23,430 dunams, and in the latter six months to only 16,000 dunams. In the coastal area purchases were 18,927 dunams; in the Gaza region 2,983 dunams; in the northern Huleh 6,500 dunams; in the Beisan Valley 305 dunams; in the mountain areas 9,717 dunams. As the Keren Kayemeth, in addition to the foregoing purchases from non-Jews, also acquired 5,033 dunams from Jewish companies and 35 dunams of urban land, its total accessions were 37,550 dunams, bringing the total land possessions of the Fund on August 31, 1940 to 518,200 dunams.

Detailing the Assistance Required of the American Red Cross

By the Jewish Community of Palestine

By Whom Submitted: This memorandum is submitted by Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, National Chairman of the United Palestine Appeal, on behalf of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, the body recognized in the League of Nations Mandate for Palestine--held by Great Britain--as the supreme representative of the Jewish people in Palestine. The memorandum has the concurrence of the Palestine Emergency Committee, comprising the leading American bodies concerned with the emergency problems of Palestine: the Zionist Organization of America; Hadassah, the Women's Zionist Organization of America; the Mizrahi Organization of America; and the Labor Zionist Organization of America.

The Purpose of the Memorandum: The American Red Cross is being called upon to make available to the Jewish Agency for Palestine, for use by the Jewish community in Palestine, such supplies, in materials and/or cash, as are required to enable it to deal with the problems caused by war.

The Background: Insofar as the war is concerned, Palestine is being administered as a part of the British Empire. It is, therefore, subject to attack. Haifa and Tel Aviv, its two great Mediterranean cities, have been bombed. Its import facilities have been sharply reduced. Its export markets have been drastically curtailed. A small country, in the midst of pioneering growth, its capital resources have been severely affected by the war. Since the rebuilding of the Jewish homeland in Palestine has involved the settlement of hundreds of thousands of men, women and children who escaped from European lands with little or no funds, assistance from outside to deal with war-relief and emergency problems is especially urgent. Some of the supplies and materials needed can be purchased only abroad; others might be available more quickly either in or near Palestine.

Evacuation of Children

The bombing of Tel Aviv, in which fifty-five young children were killed, emphasizes the need of carrying out a broad evacuation scheme promptly. Up to the present, the Palestine Government has insisted that this is a responsibility that must be borne by the Jewish community. But the community does not have the resources to cope with the situation. It is held essential that at least 15,000 children be removed from Haifa and Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, Safed, Tiberias and other points. This involves:

- (a) transportation
- (b) shelter
- (c) maintenance

The costs include the following:

(1) temporary housing, which includes tents and sanitary installations. A tent costs in Palestine from £8 to £10, into which three and, if necessary, four children can be placed.

For this item alone, therefore, the cost is tents:	£57,500

installations:	75,000
	£112,500	$450,000

(2) The feeding and maintenance of the children is another item. Children of parents with means could be provided for. But the overwhelming majority of the 15,000 being planned for come from poor homes.

The cost of feeding children three meals per day has been put per capita at 40 mils (approximately 16 cents). For 15,000 children, this involves $2,400 per day or $72,000 a month. Establishing a budget for a six-month period, the cost would total:

For shelter:	$450,000
feeding:	432,000
	$882,000

There are the additional costs of transportation. A great many of the vehicles in Palestine could be mobilized for this purpose. In addition, station wagons that might be made available as auxiliary trucks for the medical service could relieve the pressure in this field too.

Feeding of Adults and Children

There are three categories in this division:

(a) In addition to the children who must be evacuated, an urgent relief and feeding problem exists for thousands of other children who will remain in the large centers. War has thrown great numbers of the employed out of work. Since these people have never had any resources on which to fall back upon, the problem of feeding them is critical. This is particularly true of the children, for whom the dangers of malnutrition should be avoided.

As an indication of the extent of the problem, there are 10,200 children in Tel Aviv alone who must be fed. This number includes 1,200 youngsters up to 3 years of age, 1,000 between the ages of 4 and 17, the balance between 5 and 14. A survey of the feeding requirements in the larger centers indicates at least 8,000 additional children who must be cared for. At the rate of 40 mils (c.16 cents) for three meals per day per capita, this would entail a cost to feed 18,200 children of c. $2,912 a day or $87,360 a month. A six-months feeding program entails an outlay of $524,160.

(b) Although the feeding of the children is the gravest necessity, the relief problem also affects thousands of adults. The sharp limitation of traffic on the Mediterranean, with an almost total elimination of commercial shipment, has crippled the citrus industry, a pillar in the economic life of Palestine, and various other enterprises dependent on contact with the outside world for maintenance. Early in September, 1940 there were 25,000 unemployed individuals affecting 100,000 people, for whom relief provision in some form or other had to be made. It has been estimated that this program requires about $30,000 a month (c. $120,000). The Palestine Government is being pressed to provide £5,000 a month for this purpose. The Jewish community of Palestine, already taxing itself to the limit with its meagre resources, might make another £5,000 a month available. This would require £20,000 a month, or £120,000 ($480,000) for six months, from outside to maintain this urgent relief program. Failure to cope with this need must bring the inevitable consequences of malnutrition and epidemics.

(c) The bombing of Tel Aviv creates a feeding problem for a community dependent on outside resources and unable to engage in normal occupations. A survey indicates, for example, that 45,000 people in Tel Aviv alone require assistance with food costing 10 mils (approximately 4 cents) a day. The cost of this one item would be $54,000 a month.

(d) The group which has been most severely affected by the war comprises some 12,000 people who have escaped from European lands into Palestine since the outbreak of war in September, 1939. Completely without resources, they have been unable, in the face of the extraordinary conditions of war-time, to adjust themselves to the economy of Palestine which has created severe problems even for those who have been longer in the land. In every sense of the word, these 12,000 people can be described as victims of the war and refugees from the war. For them there are problems not only of feeding but of housing and particularly of medical assistance. Their feeding requirements could be met in part from the program described in (b). This phase of the program would involve an expenditure of some $57,600 a month.

Refugees Released From Internment

Since July 1, 1940, the Palestine Government has released from internment camps 3,600 Jewish refugees, men, women and children, on the understanding that their feeding and shelter would not become a Government responsibility. These refugees, suffering such terrible hardships in Europe that they were prepared to brave the most hazardous forms of transportation because they had no immigration certificates for Palestine, were seized by the Government on their arrival. Traveling for weeks and even months on crowded, unseaworthy boats, all of them came without living facilities, including clothes; many of them were ill and diseased when they finally landed.

Urgently needed facilities have been delayed because of the lack of funds. For them are needed beds and mattresses (estimated at £1 per head); shorts and shirts and labor clothes (estimated at £1.25 per head). This involves a total expenditure of $32,400. Because of their status in the country, they cannot be employed, even if avenues of employment were available. They constitute a serious feeding problem, involving per month $17,280.

The provision of hospital beds, medical attention and supplies ~~are~~ particularly urgent for this large group, many of whom will have to be nursed for months before they can be restored to health.

Immigrants On Way to Palestine

For many Jews, remaining in Europe is virtual death. Therefore, if valid immigration certificates are available any failure to utilize them represents catastrophe for the individuals involved. There are at the present moment 5,000 Jews in various European centers who are on their way to Palestine with immigration certificates made available by the Jewish Agency. These include 2,000 people utterly without means, such as workers, rabbis and children. Their cost of transportation represents a serious problem of financing for the Jewish Agency. Upon their arrival, they will need first aid assistance and maintenance. This cost has been estimated at £26 per head. Counting only the 2,000 completely helpless people, this involves an expenditure of approximately $200,000.

Medical Assistance

The bombing of Tel Aviv and Haifa, and the probability of further attacks on these and other Palestine cities, have effects in two directions: (a) civilian casualties in need of medical and surgical aid; and (b) destruction of homes involving provision of shelters for aid-raid victims. The absence of subterranean passages, such as exist in large European centers in the form of subways and underground basements of great public buildings, make this problem especially acute.

A survey of the requirements indicates the need for the immediate provision of at least 1,500 beds for first aid for air-raid victims, to be distributed in various parts of the country. This is in addition to the facilities now available in the general hospitals of the country, maintained by the Government, by Jewish municipalities or by Hadassah, the Women's Zionist Organization of America, whose network of health and medical activities, maintained for a period of some thirty years, has been greatly responsible for the remarkable advances registered in the general health of Palestine. This particular item of 1,500 beds would involve an initial cost of £10,000 ($40,000). In addition, there is required a wide variety of drugs, materials, instruments and mechanical facilities, such as ambulances and mobile dressing stations.

In the foregoing paragraphs there has been a description of the general requirements, with an indication of the costs involved, on the basis of the purchase of supplies in or near Palestine.

It is noted that the facilities that might be made available by the American Red Cross would come from two sources (1) an appropriation by Congress of $50,000,000 whose use is restricted to the purchase of supplies in the United States and (2) cash funds of the war relief campaign conducted by the Red Cross in addition to the normal resources of the Red Cross.

It is for the Red Cross to determine from which source it is best able to extend the aid so urgently required in Palestine. The listing of supplies, of food, clothing and medical materials, is preliminary in character. Additional information, following more detailed surveys, will be forthcoming from Palestine and will be made available to the Red Cross as quickly as it is received.

Quantities in each case are determined by the numbers of persons to be fed, as described in the previous sections of this memorandum. For example, powdered, skimmed milk, which, at least until recently, could be purchased in Palestine, cost £65 ($260) per ton. It has been estimated that it would take 8 tons to feed 5,000 children for 4 months. On that basis, there would be required at least 72 tons to provide for 30,000 children for a six month period, at a cost of $18,720.

Operating Agents in Palestine: The Jewish Agency for Palestine, as the supreme representative of the Jewish people in Palestine, is the authorized instrumentality through which all supervision and administration of assistance would be given. The Jewish Agency might undertake to use the facilities and personnel of bodies affiliated with it. Chief among these for medical purposes is Hadassah, Women's Zionist Organization of America, which has for three decades been responsible for many aspects of health, medical and sanitation work in Palestine. Through its subsidiary, Hadassah Medical Organization, and other activities, the Hadassah would be peculiarly qualified to cooperate in this work, especially since it is a completely American organization.

The Hadassah has established a Hadassah Emergency Committee which is headed by three American citizens in Palestine, Dr. Judah L. Magnes, President of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Julius Simon, President of the Palestine Economic Corporation of New York, and Miss Henrietta Szold, beloved American social worker who has concerned herself recently with the reception of refugee children in Palestine.

The Hadassah Emergency Committee has been in communication with the United States Consul in Jerusalem who has indicated the desirability and necessity of Red Cross support, particularly to help avoid epidemics.

If funds and supplies would be made available to the Jewish Agency for Palestine, assurance could be given to the American Red Cross that the most efficient methods of administration and the most competent personnel would be entrusted with the administration and distribution of such funds and supplies.

Dependence on Red Cross: Eliezer Kaplan, Treasurer of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, cabled from Jerusalem: "Help of Red Cross most important, particularly in view of air raids."

Dr. Judah L. Magnes and Julius Simon, after visiting Tel Aviv and reporting on "the pitiful sights, the majority of the casualties being young women and children" cabled to "appeal to Red Cross send moral and material support."

These typical sentiments of leaders of the Palestine Jewish community echo the profound concern of Americans that thousands of innocent men, women and children in Palestine may be saved, in morale and body, through the help offered by the American Red Cross.

Local Agencies: The nature of the relationship of the Jewish community of Palestine to the Palestine Government, over a period of some thirty years, must be understood to appraise the present needs and sources of support. The Palestine Government has placed upon the Jews the burden of responsibility for the maintenance of their social welfare and medical requirements. The Jewish Agency has, ever since the war broke out, urged the Government to assume that share of the burden which it felt justified by the extraordinary ^{emergency} needs. The Government has responded at the most half-heartedly, both because of its past history of contributions to Jewish social welfare, and also because it has pleaded financial burdens to maintain the war machine.

The Jewish community of Palestine has made heroic efforts to maintain and build up an adequate social welfare and health system. But it must be remembered that some 400,000 Jews have come into Palestine since 1920. The great majority were without means and Palestine has not given them wealth. During the years, therefore, the support of Jewish communities outside, and especially of America, has been counted upon to supply the difference between what the local community could do and what was needed. The responsibility of America is greater today than ever in the past--first, because war has struck violently at the economic resources of the Palestine Jews and secondly, because other Jewish communities, in Europe and elsewhere, have been eliminated, by the war and other circumstances, from sharing in the maintenance of the pioneering community in Palestine.

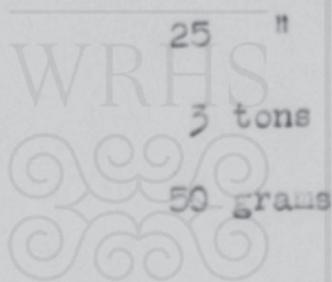

In Palestine, then, are some 500,000 Jews who look to America to aid them in the most critical period of their history. The needs are far beyond the capacities of the funds which American Jews normally raise to carry on upbuilding activities in Palestine. Therefore, the American Red Cross is called upon, in the traditional appeal to its humanitarian activities, to share in saving a great Jewish community in dire distress by reason of war.
