Dear Mrs. Oppenheimer:

On March 24th we will celebrate a special Service of Thanksgiving here at the Temple in honor of the completion by Dr. Silver of forty years of service. We would like to arrange for special flowers for the occasion, both on the pulpit and for the corridor in back of the Temple where he will receive after the Service.

I wonder if next Tuesday we might not spend a few minutes together talking over the arrangements that we will need.

Many thanks.

Reb Daniel,

History- I agree with you that in the past the Young Zionist Districts have served as a home for a number of pseudo intellectuals and have not been able to do the type of job which they should have done.

You know of my interest in this movement and the growth that I would like for it .

The last year has seen a tremendous amount of progress. We had a group of 20 young people visit Israel. We had a series of study courses at Herzl Institute on varied subjects of Jewish and Zionist interest . This year for the first time we have a regular Hebrew class for the Metropolitan area. We are working on a Year Study and Work Program in Israel for 1958. ALL SIGNS POINT TO GROWTH WITH CONTENT.....

Our Educational Conference this year is geared to set the pattern and serve as a real impetus for the future. It is meant to give to our national leadership a program for the future and a real deep approach to the role of Jewish young adults in this country towards the Zionist movement and towards American Jewish life.

Frankly, I think that the conference can be the turning point of our movement and the beginning of an important step to bring young people closer to Judaism.

I think that your dad can, better than anyone, do that job. He has never before appeared before our group and the results of such an appearance can be tremendous. I am well aware of the problems and the demands on his time etc. Yet, I am going overboard on this crusade.....

I invoke your full support and the President of the Young Zionist Districts sends you greetings and federalizes you into our service.

All kidding aside, I need your help.....

March 26, 1958

Rabbi Daniel Silver
The Temple

Dear Dan:

I am taking this opportunity to review publicity accomplishments on behalf of the special Cleveland Orchestra concert, April 1st.

Here is what has appeared to date.

The original announcement of the concert was carried in both the Cleveland Press and Cleveland News, the afternoon of the press conference. In fact, the News carried it on Page 1, of its final edition.

In addition, Dr. Silver was interviewed on WERE's featured news program the following morning.

The release on Mr. Koussevitzki (photograph plus copy) was published by the Cleveland Plain Dealer, the Cleveland News and the Heights Sun-Press.

The release on Dr. Silver and Dr. Szell, announcing the actual program was featured by all three Cleveland daily newspapers who used both the photograph and the complete text of the submitted release.

Finally, the Cleveland Press carried a story about Al Rosen's participation in the ticket sales.

We do not know what publicity was utilized by the Observer or Independent since we do not normally see these papers, but we believe, because of the coverage accorded by the dailies, that these newspapers must have likewise run their share of the material submitted.

Two of the releases which we prepared did not, to our knowledge, run in any of the dailies nor the Heights Sun-Press.

To: Rabbi Daniel Silver

3/26/58

We were told by two of the editors that they would not run the release on concert program advertising because they felt it was highly competitive with their own sale of advertising.

The release on the progress of ticket sales did not run through our efforts, was turned over to Sandy Curtiss, but to our knowledge has still not been successfully placed.

It should also be noted that we made efforts to place copy with Milt Widder, but were turned down cold.

I am sorry, Dan, that there has been some criticism of not only our efforts, but in fact of the results obtained.

Actually, I am well satisfied that maximum results were obtained from the material handled. That more was not published is simply a matter of a limited appeal of the total material available. I do not think that we were lacking in creative effort or ability, nor was the committee in any way lacking in its desire to work with us. They were helpful in every way possible.

There are many more technical aspects as to the overall appeal of the concert publicity-wise, the pressure on timing our releases, plus the desire to invite another publicity counsel to assist us. I shall not go into all the ramifications of these points in this letter, but will be happy to talk further if you wish to call me.

This much I would like to say: Sandy Curtiss agrees with us (as did several of the newspaper men) that certain releases were made far too early for proper utilization, and it was for that reason that much of the material appeared later than would have been liked.

I sincerely hope that the above facts clear the air at least a little about our efforts in connection with the publicity.

Please believe me that we wished to do just as professional job on this campaign as any we have ever done, without thought of whether we were being paid or not. In any event, I will appreciate your reactions.

Dear Dan:

I am writing to you to ask your help in an assignment which I have recently accepted. Every two years, the University of California at Los Angeles sponsors a "Religion in Life Week." The invitation to a prominent speaker is revolved among the Protestants, Catholics, and Jews. This year, for the first time in six years, it is the responsibility of the Jewish community to suggest the name of a prominent Jew whom the University could invite to speak.

Before such an invitation is issued, it is necessary that they have some informal indication of interest on the part of the proposed guest. Hence I am turning to you to inquire unofficially whether your father could be persuaded to accept such an invitation. The program will take place during the week of February 20, 1961 (A lovely time of year in California, incidentally.).

As I understand it, any questions regarding fees and/or expenses can probably be resolved once the right man is found.

If you could provide me with some indication of Dr. Silver's feelings on this proposed invitation, I should be quite grateful.

Dear Dan:

I understand that your father has been out of the city and I would like to ask you for a special favor. Would you have his secretary send me six glossy photographs of him and six biographical sketches which we need for our Pittsburgh newspaper community and congregational publicity in connection with our forthcoming Dedication ceremonies in which he will participate. Since our publicity committee will be getting started with this publicity next week, I would appreciate it if his secretary would give me this material at her earliest convenience.

Plans are moving ahead swiftly for these big Dedication events and if all goes smoothly, as it should, all of the Dedication activities will prove to be very inspiring and meaningful moments in the life of our young congregation. Once the winter weather breaks, we hope to get started on our extensive landscaping which should add an additional note of beauty to the completed Temple. Beyond that, things are rolling along here in Pittsburgh and the cyclical rounds of our religious, cultural and social programming have proven to be especially successful this year. Reading your bulletin regularly, I note that you, too, have added many outstanding congregational activities during this past year.

Hoping that this note finds you in good health and high spirits and with all good wishes to you, Adele and the children in which Ruth Lee joins me, I remain

Dear Ray:

Checking back through the tapes of sermons here at The Temple, I discover that we have approximately one hundred and seventy Sunday morning lectures currently filed on tape. Of these, perhaps ninety are those of Dr. Silver and ~~W~~ighty of my own. These represent the burden of Sunday morning preaching here since the season of 1956-57.

The studio which is prepared to transcribe these onto records is called the Boodie Enterprises. Their charge per record runs to approximately $8.00. ~~ca~~ These records are cut individually rather than pressed. The pressed record is considerably higher in cost. The tapes are all of usable quality. The library of these records for use by shut-ins in the congregation, by those who wish to review what has been said from the pulpit, would be of inestimable value. The handling control of these records would be relatively simple and might be organized through The Temple Library. In fact, we might put the records on a rental basis and recoup in some way part of the original cost. If we desire to go ahead with this project it will be possible to have all of these records made within a short time.

Hoping this is the information which you desire, I remain

The Warp and Woof of Life

From Ben's Old Desk

WHEN A TORNADO STRIKES, or lightning, or cancer, we immediately drop whatever we have been doing and embark on an entirely new program.

Since my last letter, tornadoes and lightning have taken heavy toll throughout the nation, but without touching any of our immediate family. Cancer, however, has struck without warning, and all our plans for the immediate future have been tentatively laid aside or modified to meet the existing emergency.

Edith, my wife, who has been so well over the years, attended the morning church service on Easter Sunday and the next day entered Winter Park Memorial Hospital for what we had hoped would be a minor operation. The X-rays disclosed a more serious ailment and major surgery was indicated.

Edith is now home from the hospital and convalescing nicely. What we have considered normal activities in the past will have to be greatly curtailed, at least for the present.

Fortunately, last fall, at Edith's suggestion, we had a screened porch on the east side of our house enlarged and the north exposure enclosed with maneuverable screened glass windows. This gives us an airy, shaded room on the cool side of the house in the afternoon. Edith spends much of her time resting. We eat our meals on the porch, and here, on a comfortable couch, she spends a good part of the afternoons.

TRIBUTE TO AMERICA

GOD BUILT him a continent of glory, and filled it with treasures untold. He studded it with sweet flowing fountains, and traced it with long-winding streams. He carpeted it with soft-rolling prairies, and columned it with thundering mountains. He graced it with deep-shadowed forests, and filled them with song.

Then he called unto a thousand peoples, and summoned the bravest among them. They came from the ends of the earth, each bearing a gift and a hope. The glow of adventure was in their eyes, and in their hearts the glory of hope.

And out of the bounty of earth, and the labor of men; out of the longing of hearts, and the prayer of souls; out of the memory of ages, and hopes of the world, God fashioned a nation in love, and blessed it with purpose sublime, and called it America!

BEAUTY SINGS

BY WILLIAM A. CLOUGH

PIRATES and nightingales and great bronze bells may have little in common, but they all play a part in the story behind Florida's famous singing tower.

The story covers a hundred years, spanning a space from black-cloaked robbers of the sea, taking what was not theirs, to the building of a carillon of beauty solely designed for giving. It is the story of a man who saw eternal beauty in an appearance of desolation, and of a tall pink tower from whose open windows floats lovely music.

A century ago, when King William ruled The Netherlands, a band of pirates lived on a desolate island in the North Sea, and preyed upon Dutch ships. Whenever a storm blew a vessel aground, or one sought refuge on the island, the pirates killed the crew and seized the goods.

King William determined to do something about it. He looked around for a man to lead an expedition against the pirates, and a wise and brave citizen named Bok was the one he chose. The pirates were subdued, and Bok looked at the island, desolate and barren to other eyes, and saw a vision of beauty.

Returning, he said to the King: "I would go to that island and make my home there, and plant many trees and flowers."

The King said, "Such a desire is not in keeping with your customary wisdom and good sense. That island is a wild and wind-swept place where nothing grows, and not even a bird makes its home. But if you wish to go, then go."

When efforts to interest others in helping him failed, Mr. Bok went to the island alone and planted 100 trees. The next year he planted 100 more, and the third year did the same. They grew, and other men, seeing them grow, joined him and planted more.

One spring day a pair of nightingales, flying across the sea, looked down upon inviting forests spread below. They lighted in a tree, and saw that it was good, and built their nest. Soon a family of nightingales was living on Bok's island.

As the years went by, the once barren island became a garden spot, and so many nightingales sang praise to their Creator from its wooded hills that its name became Nightingale Island. That is its name today.

Children were born into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bok. As each one left the home nest to try its wings in the world, Mother Bok said: "Wherever you go, take this purpose with you: Do something to make the world more beautiful, just as your father did."

Young Edward Bok came to America with that message in his heart. He grew to be a great editor, and in his later years built a singing tower in a beauty spot in Florida as a memorial to his father.

Carved in pink Georgia marble are figures of the birds and animals and flowers of Florida. They encircle it in the lovely adjoining grounds, and people from all parts of the earth come to delight in such sublime surroundings. So all living things are joined in a unity of beauty and of praise, as several times a week bronze bells from across the sea play the world's loveliest music for all listening ears to hear.

You Can Do More

RELAXING scientifically does not mean lying down on the job. But by learning to remain consciously relaxed throughout the day, you can actually get more work accomplished. Your mental attitude is most important. A relaxed attitude increases productivity, improves judgment, and prevents fatigue.

You can't be flustered and relaxed at the same time. You can't be angry and relaxed at the same time. If you can keep your head when all about you are losing theirs, you are relaxed and they are tense.

Here are some good things to remember:

He rests best who rests before he is tired.

Five minutes' relaxation an hour keeps you going when others fold.

Fifteen minutes' relaxation after 5 p.m. can make a tired businessman the life of the evening.

Lying down is not necessarily resting; relaxing the muscles is.

When trying to sleep, loosen the muscles in your lips and eyes and hands, and the busiest mind will quit work.

The Day and You

*Each life is made of days alike—
Some bright, some dark, some drear.
It's not the day but how it's met
That brings the smile or tear.
The day is dark! Do you rejoice
In brighter ones to come,
Or do you fret because today
Is dismal, bleak, and glum?
The day is bright! Do you repine
Since tomorrow may be blue,
Or do you love the living day
That brings much joy to you?*

—HOWARD A. RICE.

OH, WHAT A SWINDLER!

HERE IS a reprint of a clipping from a Boston paper three quarters of a century ago, which illustrates the skepticism with which human nature accepts innovations. Until rather recently we regarded the suggestion of flying to the moon with about the same intolerance.

"A man about 46 years of age, giving the name of Joshua Copper-smith, has been arrested in New York for attempting to extort funds from ignorant and superstitious people by exhibiting a device which he says will convey the human voice any distance over metallic wires so that it will be heard by the listener at the other end. He calls the instrument a 'telephone' which is obviously intended to imitate the word 'telegraph' and win the confidence of those who know of the success of the latter instrument without understanding the principles on which it is based. Well-informed people know that it is impossible to transmit the human voice over wires as may be done by dots and dashes and signals of the Morse Code, and that, were it possible to do so, the thing would be of no practical value. The authorities who apprehended this criminal are to be congratulated, and it is to be hoped that his punishment will be prompt and fitting, that it may serve as an example to other conscienceless schemers who enrich themselves at the expense of their fellow creatures."

Plunge In

UNTIL a fellow gets into a thing, he never really knows the thrill of it. He may watch a game of baseball. He may shout himself hoarse for one team or another, but not until he is lined up at the plate, bat in hand, waiting for the ball to come tearing at him from the pitcher's mound—not until then does he feel the thrill that comes to those who play the game.

Life is the greatest of all games. But to get the thrill of it, one must be a doer of things, not merely an onlooker. It doesn't make so much difference what part one may play in the game of life—so long as one plays it on the square. There is a thrill for every player whose heart and enthusiasm is in what he does.

Your Goat

DID anybody ever get your goat? Don't let them do it.

Some decades ago there was an old custom of placing a goat in the same stall with a race horse. The companionship of the goat, it was believed, soothed a high-strung, thoroughbred horse.

It happened at times that the owner of a competing horse in a race would cause the goat from the opposition stable to be stolen overnight, which often fretted the horse so that he would be worthless in a race the following day.

"They got his goat."

When anyone or anything "gets your goat," it means that you have lost your poise. Poise is the secret of well-being. It is the control of the mind. Without mind-control things are bound to go wrong.

Poise is your goat. Don't let anybody or anything get it away from you. It is the secret of business success and personal happiness.

Just A Thought

Join the great company of those who make the barren places of life fruitful with kindness. Carry a vision of heaven in your heart, and make the world correspond to that vision.

—HELEN KELLER.

The Cog

*I'm but a cog in life's vast wheel,
That daily makes the same old trip;
Yet what a joy it is to feel
That but for me the world might slip.
'Tis something after all to jog
Along and be a first-class cog.*

Eight Simple Words

A FEW years ago the London Spectator offered a prize for the best philosophy of life which could be written on the back of a postcard. The entry which won the prize could almost have been written on the back of a postage stamp. There were just eight words in it: "Love, trust, dare, and go on doing it."

What two animals follow you everywhere you go? Your calves.

DON'T rely too much on the government to bring you happiness and prosperity. Look what it did to the American Indians.

We are grateful to a host of friends for messages of cheer. Our sons and daughters and grandchildren have been most constant and solicitous in their attention. Dr. Janet came from Lincoln, Nebraska, to be with us all during the time of the operation and for several days thereafter. Marion came from Swarthmore, Pennsylvania, for the week following her mother's release from the hospital. Elton and Helen were down late in May, and Benj hopes to get down in June.

What a joy it is, just to be alive! Today is ours. We are both living on "borrowed time," and we don't know how much longer our "time" notes will be extended or renewed by the Executive Head of the "Bank of Time" referred to in Facts and Fancies of March, 1961, and reprinted by request. This reprint was enclosed with your August, 1961 Forbes Facts and Fancies.

Our lives are made up of days and deeds. Our days are the warp, our deeds the woof. Another web has been woven, and we look back over the years that have gone. In and out, the threads of action have alternated between sunshine and shadow.

*Today, unsullied, comes to thee newborn;
Tomorrow is not thine;
The sun may cease to shine
For thee, ere earth shall greet its morn.*

—Today Is Mine.

BENJAMIN P. FORBES

QUESTION: Why is Forbes Chocolate Flavor Powder a superior product?

ANSWER: If it is superior, as many folks say it is, it is because of something which has grown into our organization with long years of working together. We are all instilled with a consuming desire to produce the best possible product in the most economical manner, with a minimum of waste and maximum efficiency. Whether or not all of us in the Forbes Organization have attained this ideal is not for us to say, but at least that is what we are "shooting" at.

We prepare Chocolate Flavor Powders for chocolate milk drinks and for flavoring ice cream. If you are not already using Forbes Products, send us your name and address on your business card or letterhead, tell us how many gallons of chocolate you process per week and we'll be glad to send you a free sample so you may evaluate its quality.

Dear Ernie:

Here is a paragraph or two which you may find adequate:

Dear _____:

As you undoubtedly know, our beloved Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver will celebrate his seventieth birthday this January. The community is tendering to him a civic reception. He has refused every proffer of a gift from the congregation except the honor of having published in his name a Jubilee Volume of essays dedicated to him by his friends among the great leaders and scholars of the day.

We would like to do something more. Dr. Silver represents to us personal friendship of long standing, and the best in Jewish life. Out of friendship we should like to make a substantial contribution to the Abba Hillel Silver Charitable and Educational Foundation. These monies originally provided, ten years ago in honor of his sixtieth anniversary, have been used in all manner of good cause. They helped to defray Professor Zucknik's publication costs of the original Dead Sea Scrolls. They have been used to sponsor important speakers and cultural activity at The Temple. They have enriched our lives in many ways. This is our way of inviting you to join with us in honoring Dr. Silver by making it possible for him to continue many of his cultural and Jewish projects.

Ernie, change it as you will. I presume this is the gist of it.

Cordially yours,

Prayer delivered at Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver's 70th birthday celebration
January 20, 1963

Rabbi Arthur J. Lelyveld

Guardian of Israel and Lord of all worlds, we bring before Thee our abiding thankfulness.

In every generation Thou hast poured a portion of Thy spirit into a chosen few who interpret Thy will and hearten the troubled souls of men; but Thy sages have taught that in every generation there arises a leader without peer -- Dabor echud b'chol dor v'eyn sheni -- and we are grateful that he dwells among us:

One who has been the tribune of our people, who at the nadir of our fortunes restored the fortitude of Israel with a blazing vision of Zion redeemed, who shook the halls of the parliament of man with prophetic eloquence, whose blessed pen dipped in the wells of mystic and Messianic hope has spoken fearlessly and comfortingly to our present need, who has been a rabbi among rabbis -- enhancing the dignity and the authority of an ancient title.

God grant that all he has builded may be established, assuring his immortality not only in his writings and historic role, but also in those who will follow after him and carry on his ministry.

Od y'nuvun b'sevo, d'shenim v'ra-ananim yih'yu -- may his latter years be filled with richness and productivity as were his former years and may he continue to lead, teach, and inspire us in health and strength -- ad meoh v'esrim shono.

Amen

Dear Dr. Silver:

As Chairman of the Cleveland Chapter of the American Committee of Bar-Ilan University, I am pleased to inform you that the University is planning to introduce into its School of Social Sciences a Department in American Civilization, as a step toward broadening Israel's understanding of the American social order.

This local Chapter will attempt to establish within this Department, a Cleveland Chair in American Jewish Community Studies, sponsored through the concerted contributions of a number of foundations in this City. It has further been proposed that this Chair be also in memory of your parents, and this proposal has been favorably received.

I have been asked by Rabbi Seymour Zambrowsky, head of the Canadian Committee for the University, to arrange for a visit with you to present the proposed undertaking in its fuller ramifications. I trust that you will find it possible to accede to this request, and I shall take the liberty of calling you in a day or two in connection with this matter.

My dear General.

I fully sympathize with you this evening
What they are doing to you to-night - they do to me 11 months ago.

I am reminded, the two Jews who freed them when in the streets, Moscow in the days, the year. One had a passport - the other did not. Suddenly they saw a policeman approaching them. The one Jew who did not have a passport - ~~became~~ got scared. The other said to him - take my passport - and when the policeman comes near - ~~I will start~~ start ~~the~~ run. When the policeman will see me running - he will undoubtedly start chasing ~~me~~.
They ~~you~~ ^{I would say} ~~would~~ ^{get} away. All right - The Jew who had had ~~the~~ ^{any} passport started running with the policeman after him - When he finally caught up - he demanded, the Jew to show his passport - The Jew asked in - otherwise he has passport - ^{what} ~~what~~ ^{then} ~~then~~ you mean for? I forget fully well then many - ~~doctor~~ - ~~an~~ - ~~other~~ - told me to run - And then then me for chasing you - why did you stop - well, I thought you had the same trouble as I - what to the man ~~with~~ of the police ~~man~~ - and then many for same reason -

- Enclosed - you and I have had the same trouble than you - We both were 20 years old - and they treat us the same manner - a to train

Of Jan 3 new year and then - I have from you for about 3 new years - I suppose that is why they asked me to be the toast - wrote this evening. They assumed then I could be you but biographer - and ^{right} want you ~~but~~ present. But to present a true present - ^{the extent} ~~the extent~~ want to be away ~~the extent~~ as well as lights - of visible faults and muddy darkness of a darker back-ground to make the virtues more beaming.

To, an case dividend, I am truly emboldened. I feel very much like the man who was still - one day by a tramp who asked him for a handout - a drink - a cracker - a back. I suppose you want many more

I don't know - so you can ~~say~~ say as I am the one. I have no more. I'm that one - and the man, I'll give you to take - Come ~~to~~ help me to my home - I want my help to do what happy to ~~be~~ ^{man} who has no more.

I am also worried about you, Emma!
You have led an example for the best & left behind the literary world ^{anywhere} exercise a man and ~~and~~ his ~~visto broad~~ ~~text~~ from their minds.
You are people who ~~put~~ ^{are} ~~in~~ ^{but}, in their unlikable ~~posture~~ ^{their} ~~badness~~ ^{during}

~~the more the more~~ they said that you should not have to unwarranted a demand.

They had the other 2 years between meetings on day.

What shall I say of Dr. Emanuel Neumann on this beautiful occasion when men from all walks of life, and from all parts of the nation have gathered to pay him tribute?

He has always been a modest man and his friends greatly admired this quality in him. He would be embarrassed by excessive praise, ^{by a rhapsodic eulogy.} But certainly the truth may be spoken of it.

When Dr. Neumann served, he served a cause, not a career. His life possessed an inner spiritual integrity, a clear direction, a firm consistency. He was the willing and eager captive of an all-mastering cause from his early youth. He served it without any expectations of reward. He fought at its behest without bitterness and rancor. He was never certain of the outcome -- for who could predict the ordinances of international political constellations? But early in life he saw his task and his mission, and in great confidence, he moved steadily toward his fixed objective across the shifting terrain of the most turbulent years in our history.

In his steady and resolute dedication there was always a high elevation and distinction of tone and manner. When he spoke, he spoke effectively but with restraint and with a deep sense of responsibility. He was always the teacher, the educator, never the agitator. He sought to persuade men into conviction rather than incite them ^{into} ~~with~~ admiration. And when he wrote -- and some of the important documents of our Movement came from his pen -- he wrote with great perception and with ~~judgment, clarity and force~~ ^{judgment, clarity and force}.

He had a clear grasp of the political philosophy of our Movement, and among his colleagues he was perhaps the most consistent and faithful disciple of the immortal Theodor Herzl.

Dr. Neumann must have derived a great deal of satisfaction from the years which he has spent in the Zionist Movement. He and I and our friends -- many of them who are here and some who are no longer here -- were engaged in a great drama -- the oft-repeated drama of our peoples' eternal renewal.

The genius of our people has strikingly revealed itself in making old things new and small things great.

Men speak of the people of Israel as an old and venerable people. ^{לעזר ולי} But Israel never permitted itself to grow old. It always sought to renew itself. ^{לעזר ולי} Its challenge was "Renew your youth like the phoenix." ^{לעזר ולי} Its prayer was always "Renew our days as of old." ^{לעזר ולי}

The land of Israel is a very ancient land, built upon the ruins of long forgotten centuries and pre-historic civilizations. But time and again our people made that ancient land new again. Here, too, a promise was fulfilled -- "And thy descendants will rebuild the old, waste places." ^{לעזר ולי}

The language of Israel is also an ancient speech, often consigned to desuetude and obsolescence. But time and again it was revived by our people, renewed, made pliant again and adapted to the needs of ^{every} a new age.

Our people, too, had a genius to make small things great.

The people of Israel has always been a small people which made itself great. Very early in our history, we were admonished: "The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor choose you because you were more in number than other peoples -- for you were the fewest of all peoples." But small as it was, it -- together with another small people, the Greeks -- molded our modern civilization.

The land of Israel, too, was always small but Israel made it "the most desirable of all lands". No land has loomed so large in the spiritual history of the Western World. It became the Holy Land of half of mankind.

The book of Israel -- the Bible -- is also a small book but no book has so largely influenced the social, political and religious thought of the world.

In this continuing drama of renewal -- making old things new and small things great -- we of this generation were again thrillingly engaged and Dr. Neumann has been among its leading actors.

Today in Israel our people are again making old things new and small things great. In Israel today an old people is being reborn, an old land is being made new again. Where there was wasteland and wilderness, there towns and cities are springing up and from Metulla to Eilat one hears the hum of industry, the sound of plow and tractor, the pulse and throb of creative life and the song of children at play. An old language is being revived. A veritable miracle of rejuvenation is taking place before our very eyes. Mind, heart and hand, labor and sweat, faith and vision are again fashioning a new heaven and a new earth. All this is making Israel today the most exciting corner of the earth.

It has been a rare privilege for Dr. Neumann -- as it has been for all of us -- to be numbered among the dramatis personae in this heroic drama of Renewal. And great must be his pride and his satisfaction.

Well, my dear Emanuel, you stand today in the full tide of your active career with so much yet to be done and so much that you can still do. On the loom of the years you have woven the resplendent cloth of a noble career whose golden threads are ideals and service and learning. But the weaving fortunately is still to go on, according to the gracious pattern which you have set. Let the shuttles, therefore, fly! The years ahead will be even lovelier, mellower, set in the frame of increased appreciation and the growing esteem of your friends.

The Rabbis said that scholars, the older they get, the more precious their wisdom, the more profound their insights, the greater their contributions to mankind.

Dear Mr. Tucker:

I cannot begin to express to you our profound gratitude. We are grateful to you for your friendship and your presence. We are grateful to God for your gift of melody, which draws on the centuries and brings them alive. Dad had the greatest admiration for you personally and spoke to me often of your many services in behalf of Israel and our faith. But all this you know. What you will never know is how profoundly you touched our hearts and how significantly you raised our spirits. For that we are profoundly in your debt.

Dear Rabbi,

Your late revered father may have told you about the proposed Cleveland Chair in American Jewish Community Studies at Bar-Ilan University, to be established in memory of your paternal grandparents in accordance with the enclosed statement.

When Dr. Silver called to fix the March 15th date he also told me, in response to my question, that he could see nothing wrong in your being a member of the delegation that would approach the Beaumont Foundation for support of the Chair. May I suggest that, at your convenience, we meet to discuss the project in detail and to consider the proper steps for its implementation.

You will be interested to know that Mrs. Albert A. Levin has accepted the chairmanship of the Cleveland Women for Bar-Ilan and that one of her associates is Mrs. Julie Kravitz.

I shall take the liberty of calling you in the near future for an appointment.

Most sincerely,

STATEMENT

Not for publication; for personal information only.

In July of 1963 the Global Committee of Bar-Ilan University, then meeting in Jerusalem, received a request from the Cleveland Chapter, American Committee for Bar-Ilan, to look into the prospect of establishing at the University a Department in American Civilization, which would bring to Israel the sociological know-how developed within the American civic and communal structure. The Chapter further indicated its readiness to undertake the sponsorship of a Cleveland Chair in American Jewish Community Studies as the initial phase of this Department.

The Global Committee gave the request immediate consideration and subsequent approval, at which the Cleveland Chapter proceeded to evolve the following approach:

- a) that the Chair be established in memory of the parents of Dr. Abba Hillel Silver;
- b) that the Chair be established largely through grants from Cleveland foundations.

On October 22, 1963 a delegation consisting of Rabbi Seymour M. Zambrowsky, honorary president of the Canadian Committee for Bar-Ilan, Cleveland Chapter Chairman Edward J. Schweid, and the undersigned visited Rabbi Silver and apprised him of the nature of the proposed project. Rabbi Silver was greatly moved and readily gave his approval, with the condition that public announcement of the Chair be made only when substantial funds had been obtained to assure its implementation.

Ten days prior to his passing Rabbi Silver personally called this office and gave March 15, 1964 as his preferable date for the dinner that would formally proclaim the Cleveland Chair.

With the entire House of Israel in grievous mourning over the irreparable loss which it has suffered, we consider it even more fitting that the Cleveland community proceed, in accordance with Rabbi Silver's sentiments, to establish this Chair and to proclaim it on the date he selected, as one of its expressions of gratitude that this great leader of Jewry had chosen to live and work in its midst.

Dear Daniel,

(For that is the name
by which your former teacher at Shaker Heights High School thinks of you)

I have just been listening on my radio out here in California to such a fine
tribute to your father.
One of the speakers on this program was Curtis Lee Smith, another former student of mine at Shaker Heights School.

I was always a great admirer of Rabbi Silver, and I often attended the service at his church to hear him speak. My deepest sympathy goes to you and to your brother Raphael, who also was a student of mine, in the loss of such a wonderful father and such an outstanding man, a leader in many worthy causes.

A few years ago, Donnie, I heard that you were following in your father's footsteps and had become a Rabbi, and I was very proud of you. What great satisfaction that must have brought to your father! I meant at that time to Send you my congratulations

I remember you so well
just as you were in high school. Such a fine mind
you had and such vitality, and yet you were always ready to see the humorous side of things. You had a personality that endeared you to everyone. I saw great promise in you at that time.

I hope to be in Cleveland
some time in the future
and to attend your service at the synagogue.

Again my sympathy to you,

Dear Dr. Silver:

Thank you for your kind letter of December 4th. It touched me deeply and words cannot express how much I mourn the loss of my dear friend.

In your letter you mentioned the responsibilities which your dad had assumed. You are aware that in April 1965 the Seventy-fifth Anniversary of the Jewish Quarterly Review will be celebrated. A special volume will be issued and it is contemplated to have an international congress of scholars and men of thought. Your dad had agreed to write an article for the anniversary issue and he also had accepted the chairmanship of the Convention.

I would very much like that you should write an article for the special issue. We could discuss the subject of the article by correspondence or maybe when we get together. I cannot think of anyone who possesses the prestige in the scholarly world who could assume the chairmanship of the Convention.

To properly organize the Convention a considerable sum of money is needed. Is there a possibility that Edgar Hahn could aid us in obtaining a subvention?

Is it too early to think about a volume to be published in memory of Dr. Abba Hillel Silver?

How about your manuscript? Is it ready for publication? Let me hear from you.

Please convey my warm wishes to your dear mother. With my best to you

Dear Miss Wickwire:

A voice from one's childhood is always most welcome, especially so when it brings a reminder of happy high school days and eager learning. I am most grateful to you for your kind note of sympathy.

Much has happened to me these past twenty years. Academically, I graduated from Harvard, was ordained at the Hebrew Union College, and I received my Ph.D. from the University of Chicago. In terms of family, I have a lovely wife and three energetic children who are beginning to wend their way through the Shaker school system. Professionally, I served as a Navy Chaplain during the Korean War, a small pulpit in Chicago, and I have been at The Temple for eight rewarding years. It has been a good life.

I do hope that if you return to Cleveland that we may have a chance to visit.

My dear Rabbi:

At the time of your father's funeral I was requested to make a tape recording of the Service to preclude any possibility of loss of this invaluable recording in the event of failure of the Temple equipment.

As you may already know, the fidelity of tape recordings, where music is involved, is greatly improved when recording at a high speed. For this reason my recording was made at $7\frac{1}{2}$ IPS. The Temple recording was operating at one half that speed, ordinarily quite acceptable for recording of speech only. I am aware that the Temple recording of Richard Tucker's Cantorial singing was not as satisfactory as it might have been for which reason I am enclosing a complete tape of the Service including Tucker's portion, although I am not fully satisfied with the Tucker portion of my own tape since a great deal had to do with the positioning of the microphones over which I had no control.

Nonetheless, I hope you will agree that while it is not perfect, the recording is most satisfactory and I am glad to send it along for whatever purpose it may serve.

Also I want to thank you for the congratulatory note concerning the newspaper article of last Monday.

Kindest regards,

Dear Rabbi Silver:

I want to first extend my deepest sympathy to you and the entire Silver family on the loss you and all Jewry have sustained. I remember hearing your father many times and the memory is vivid and permanent.

I am presently engaged in completing a volume in which I would like to include a biographical portrait of your revered father and I am writing to ask for any information you may be able to allow me to have for a short while and also for permission to quote short selections from the addresses, sermons, and essays he has written. My plan is to include only such selections as provide the feeling of the great man he was indeed and which suggest his strongest views.

I know that we have not met. I have written, however, and suggest my volume A Handbook for the Jewish Family by Bloch and Blessed Art Thou by Hebrew Publishing Company as references.

I do hope you will be able to provide me with some pertinent information or direct me to the best sources.

You will understand, of course, that our schedules have been thrown into confusion and that it will not be able for us to be with you. Dad knew Columbus to be a fine Jewish community, charitable in its undertaking, and helpful in all good cause. He was proud of the roots that American Judaism had established, and he looked forward confidently to our religious future. He was proud of the contribution American Judaism had made to our national life and he was especially proud of the contribution the American Jewish community had made toward the establishment of the State of Israel.

"Da Memoriam."

At the request of Rabbi
Albert Plautkin of Temple

Beth Israel of this city, this portrait was exhibited in the auditorium during his eulogy of Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver, in which he stated that Rabbi Silver was a "giant among men, and truly became the 'spokesman of American Jewry'". That the passing of this many-faceted man would be deeply felt by all people, for his was an interest in all humanity.

To the family of Patti

Dear Danny:

I feel that you ought to know that the Hebrew Union College / Biblical and Archaeological School held a Memorial Service last night, marking the Shloshim of your father's passing. To hold such a service, entirely in Hebrew, the language he loved, in the Synagogue of the Jerusalem branch of his Alma Mater, in the capital of the State which he so valiantly fought to establish, was, I believe completely in the spirit of the example and the legacy which he left us. The participants in the Service were Israel Goldstein, Morton Berman, Joshua Haberman and myself. Berman and Goldstein are going to send you copies of their manuscripts. My few words are not extant in writing.

I realize that ours was but one of very many such gatherings throughout the length and breath of the Jewish World. But I do hope that you and your mother will find a source of comfort in the universal gratitude and respect in which the memory of your father is being held.

Abba Hillel Silver—An Appreciation

A REMARKABLE UNITY pervades the still-incomplete lifework of Abba Hillel Silver. His entire career runs in a straight line toward an almost inevitable meeting with an exacting assignment from history.

The nature of that assignment was decreed by "the inescapable logic of events" (a phrase that would figure prominently in his public utterances). His historic task was to realize the revolutionary program which had been set in motion by Theodor Herzl in 1897—to secure international recognition for the reconstitution of an independent Jewish State.

An American rabbi, preeminent as a leader of Reform Judaism, but nurtured by East European Jewish traditions and folkways, and bound in love to the masses of his people; undeviatingly committed from early childhood to the Herzlian concept of political Zionism; schooled in the processes of political action in a democratic society; endowed with a powerful intellect, a commanding personality, and oratorical skills that could persuade masses and move them to action, Dr. Silver was perfectly cast for his role by life itself.

The S. S. Kæln, out of Bremen, reached New York harbor on a June day in 1902. Among the new immigrants whom it brought to Ellis Island was a thin, dark, curly-haired, nine-year-old boy, decked out in a sailor suit for the occasion. Abba Silver, held in tow by his mother, Dinah, had arrived together with his older brother and a sister to rejoin their father, Rabbi Moses Silver, in the new home which he had established in America. Behind them was the Lithuanian town of Neinstadt-Schirwindt where the six Silver children were born—and also a tradition of learning and scholarship which they would transplant in the exciting new land that welcomed them.

One of the dominant themes of Abba Hillel Silver's later life and action was born on that day: belief in America as a force for good in the world. He would come to know America intimately—her vastness and diversity, but mostly her power to achieve a better life—and would eagerly make his own contribution to her civilization.

The America he first encountered was New York's lower East Side. His childhood in the family's tenement on Madison Street was altogether happy. The drabness of tenement life at the turn of the century seems to have been shut out. Here, as in Neinstadt, his home was a place of scholarship, tolerantly administered by Rabbi Moses Silver.

The third in a succession of ordained rabbis, Moses Silver did not make the rabbinate his profession. In Neinstadt he had earned a modest livelihood in the soap business, but learning was the essence of his life. In New York he taught in a Hebrew school and also gave free instruction to many gifted youngsters. He remained dedicated to scholarship until his death at the age of eighty-seven at his home in Jerusalem, where he and his wife settled in 1924. Shortly before his eightieth birthday Moses Silver published two volumes of a Biblical commentary, Hishukei Kessef (Filigree of Silver), which were well received by both scholars and laymen and which reflect his learning and his piety. The range of his intellectual interests was wide and included not only traditional Biblical and Talmudic studies, but modern Hebrew literature and the secular humanities as well.

There were not many Jewish homes at the turn of the century in which such coexistence was actively encouraged or even acceptable. Traditional Jewish learning and "secularism" were generally in conflict, giving rise to fanaticism and intolerance on both sides. Moses Silver taught his children to view Judaism in its entirety and to reconcile, rather than accentuate, apparent diversities.

Zionist thought was, inevitably, a central influence in such a home. Heroic Biblical figures inspired visions of a reborn Jewish nation. The essays of Ahad Ha-Am, the philosopher of cultural Zionism, were read and discussed in Hebrew. The lifework of Theodor Herzl, the founder of modern political Zionism, was followed avidly by the entire family.

In 1904, the year of Herzl's untimely death, the two Silver boys formed the Dr. Herzl Zion Club. It was the very first Zionist Hebrew-speaking group in America and was to serve as a training ground for the future leadership of the movement. Its first president was thirteen-year-old Maxwell Silver, who was succeeded two years later by Abba Hillel Silver. The club held debates and performed plays in the Hebrew language. A half-century later one of the group reminisced: "Abba always played the young hero, with flashing eyes and sword-play. He was built for the role. He looked the part."

The club's membership included Emanuel Neumann, who would later head the Zionist Organization of America and be Silver's closest associate in the political leadership of United States Zionism; the future Hebrew educator Israel Chipkin; a number of subsequent leaders of the rabbinate, including Barnett R. Brickner, Abraham Feldman, Benjamin Friedman, Jesse Schwartz, as well as many others who were destined to make significant contributions to American Jewish life. Of this élite group and its meetings on the lower East Side, Neumann wrote in 1953: "I joined . . . on a wintry Saturday evening, when the club was celebrating the Bar Mitzvah of the president. Its president then and its natural leader for years thereafter was Abba Hillel Silver. His was a firm rule, tempered always with a saving sense of humor. He was loved, admired and obeyed. His word at the end of a long debate had the ring of finality and was accepted without demur. The very quality of his voice brought conviction."

One of the recorded incidents in the history of the Dr. Herzl Zion Club is prophetic. The club had been plunged into ideological controversy almost from its inception. At first, the anti-Zionist views of the rigidly Orthodox left it without a meeting place, but for the home of Rabbi Moses Silver, to whom the boys turned for guidance and support. Finally, the group received permission to meet in the nonsectarian Educational Alliance. With the advent of a new director of that institution, the club was again facing homelessness. Its name was considered too "political." One day the director was making the rounds with one of the benefactresses of the Educational Alliance. On entering the room where the Dr. Herzl Zion Club boys met, they were astonished to find the meeting being conducted in Hebrew. The director and the good lady lectured the group severely on their poor display of "Americanism" in choosing to speak an alien tongue. When they finished, a tall boy in his early teens stood up and announced calmly that the Dr. Herzl Zion Club identified itself with the Zionist movement, that it would continue to use the language which David had found suitable for the composition of the Psalms, and through which Isaiah had expressed his vision of universal peace and justice. Quite speechless, the director and the lady withdrew. The Dr. Herzl Zion Club continued to conduct meetings in Hebrew at the Educational Alliance—and Abba Hillel Silver had won his first ideological battle against an attitude which he would encounter and best time and again in his career.

In 1911, after graduating from Townsend Harris High School, where he was one of the top students, Abba Hillel Silver took a step which must have been anathema to some of his neighbors and also worried a number of his young Zionist comrades. Like Maxwell a few years earlier, he decided to enter the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati—the center and stronghold of Reform Judaism. To the ultra-Orthodox this was a few steps short of apostasy. To some of the Herzl Zion boys, mindful of the anti-Zionist attitude which then permeated Reform Jewry, it represented a threat that their leader might be taken over by the “enemy.” He, however, was certain that he and other friends who were to accompany or follow him to Cincinnati would ultimately occupy and dominate the citadel of Liberal Judaism. Interestingly enough—perhaps typically—the Silver boys’ decision received warm encouragement and support from their father.

Accepted by the Hebrew Union College, he also enrolled in the University of Cincinnati with the intention of completing his rabbinical studies simultaneously with his general college education. He carried this off with resounding success, accomplishing nine years’ work at the College in four years and graduating from both institutions in 1915.

The motif of leadership runs throughout his college years and is fresh in the memory of fellow students.

Young Rabbi Silver’s first pulpit was in Wheeling, West Virginia, at the Eoff Street Temple. Wheeling was chiefly significant in his life for the presence of Virginia Horkheimer, daughter of a leader of the community, and the product of five generations on American soil. The courtship outlasted his stay in that city and was continued from Cleveland until their marriage in 1923.

This wonderfully happy union must occupy a central place in any evaluation of Rabbi Silver’s career. Virginia Silver, a personality in her own right, has been content to realize herself as wife to a remarkable man and mother to two fine sons. Living in the atmosphere of love and support which she created, Rabbi Silver received an added measure of confidence and strength for his career. He also received valuable counsel—for Virginia Silver proved to be very astute in taking the measure of a person.

Silver was all of twenty-four when, after two years in Wheeling, he received a call to one of the most important pulpits in America—Cleveland’s Tifereth Israel (The Temple). From 1917, the year of his arrival in Cleveland, it has been his beloved spiritual home and the workshop of his creative spiritual life.

There were, of course, doubts about his maturity. He was, after all, succeeding the venerable Rabbi Moses J. Gries, and skeptics anticipated a fiasco. His first sermon, which has become something of a legend, swept away all reservations. An electrified congregation came away with the proud knowledge that they had chosen as their spiritual leader a most extraordinary man.

Not that it was all smooth sailing thereafter. The words which rang out from Rabbi Silver's pulpit were not designed to please, but to summon to moral and social action. His uncompromising Zionism, his internationalism in a Midwest stronghold of isolationism, his espousal of the cause of organized labor long before labor became a major force in American society, his attacks against some of the most powerful economic and political interests in the state and nation—these and other views were extremely distasteful to some leaders of the city. Conflict and controversy were inevitable, as were victory and vindication for the unyielding rabbi who had won the hearts and minds of the congregation and large sections of the community. It became clear at the very outset that Abba Hillel Silver could be held only on his own terms.

The beginnings of his work in Cleveland were interrupted by the First World War. He served in France where his ministry to the Allied troops won him the Academic Palms as Officier de l'Instruction Publique.

Upon his return he plunged into the work of making The Temple not only the largest, but perhaps the most progressive and educationally creative Liberal Jewish congregation in America. Two years after his arrival the membership had risen from 725 families to 916. Five years later, in 1922, Rabbi Silver laid the cornerstone for the inspiring edifice where the congregation has worshiped since 1924. In 1959 a great new wing was added to The Temple, which today boasts a large school, a fine library, and an exceptional museum of Jewish religious and ceremonial art, among the many other educational and cultural facilities available to its membership of 2,400 families. This many-faceted institution is now jointly administered by Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver and his son, Daniel Jeremy Silver, the fifth in the family's unbroken chain of rabbis and scholars—a moving and poetic culmination of one of the senior rabbi's most cherished dreams.

An achievement like The Temple would for most men represent total fulfillment, leaving little time or inclination for other endeavors. The very process of building and physical expansion can become an all-absorbing occupation. Spiritual and moral purposes have too often been trapped and entombed in the cornerstones of magnificent edifices. Their size and complexity impose heavy administrative demands on the spiritual leader, who is in constant danger of being transformed into a corporation executive or professional fund raiser. But Rabbi Silver has kept the emphasis where it belongs: on Jewish teaching and worship.

Moreover, the daily tasks of the rabbinate, however significant and rewarding in themselves, could not contain his searching mind. He heard other voices. The love of scholarship could not be stilled and he somehow found time to study and to write—though never to the extent that he wished.

In 1925 he received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Hebrew Union College. His thesis was later expanded into his first published book, Messianic Speculations in Israel (1927)—regarded by scholars as a classic contribution to the study of Messianic concepts. The subject matter is highly illuminating in relation to Silver's total personality. Superficially it would appear that nothing could be more alien to the spirit of one who is so totally committed to action in the modern world than the mystical quest for the Messianic era and its meaning. Nevertheless, it is precisely this subject which absorbed him as a young scholar and which has recurred frequently in his writings. He applied his keen intelligence to gain a fuller understanding of the Messianic motif which is unmistakable in Jewish experience over the centuries. The qualities of Jewish mystical thought—its fervor and scope—appealed to him, though he firmly rejected mystical solutions to man's problems. He brought these qualities to his work in the rabbinate and the Zionist movement.

In attempting to define the unique nature of Silver's leadership of the Zionist movement, the author wrote in 1949: "No real understanding of Dr. Silver—the man and the leader—is possible without an appreciation of the fact that he is first and foremost Rabbi Silver, a person of deep spiritual convictions and a profound scholar. . . . He regards his pulpit in Cleveland, Ohio, with the reverence and devotion of one for whom there can be no greater calling in life. If we bear this fact in mind, many things which at first glance appear mystifying become crystal clear: why he underwent the physical discomfort of spending many days of each week on trains and planes, commuting between New York and Cleveland or Washington and Cleveland—this over a period of six years—in order to be back in his pulpit on the Sabbath; why, even in the midst of the most severe crises in his political life, he could be found at The Temple happily engaged in teaching a class of children; why, surrounded by admiring multitudes in New York, he would confide to his friends that he yearned for the peace of his study; why he always spoke so wistfully of the days when he could devote himself to Jewish scholarship—the days when he wrote the profound Messianic Speculations in Israel.

"When we view Dr. Silver in the light of his dedication to the spiritual essence of Judaism, we are better able to understand his unshakable faith that the Zionist cause would triumph, no matter what the obstacles, as well as the quality akin to mysticism which is present even in his most 'political' utterances—a quality which some regarded as a contradiction of his basic character, but which those close to him understood to be the true expression of that character."

Two decades of intermittent but impressive scholarly activity were abruptly halted when Silver was called to the leadership of the American Zionist movement—though this phase of his creative life was energetically resumed following his withdrawal from Zionist politics. He wrote three more books prior to his assumption of active political leadership. The Democratic Impulse in Jewish History (1928) is a compact presentation of his view of Judaism as essentially a people's religion and of Jewish creativity as people-based. The primary role occupied by the Jewish people in his concept of Jewish history would determine his approach to all aspects of Jewish life—including, of course, the Zionist program which, to his mind, required a strong popular foundation. The interaction between people and leader—each drawing inspiration from the other, with the former always paramount—would be a fascinating subject of inquiry throughout his life. He would also have the opportunity, given to few scholars, of translating his concepts into living history.

Silver foresaw the vast economic changes that would sweep over America in the 1930's. In Religion in a Changing World (1930) he outlined a program toward a just social order and described the role that a vigorous religion would have to assume. It was in the prophetic tradition. The volume was for many months a nonfiction best-seller.

In World Crisis and Jewish Survival (1941), a collection of essays (including his 1940 Dupleian Lecture at Harvard), the scholar is embattled against the then-triumphant Nazi tyranny, and there are signs of the emerging political leader. There is also a ringing confidence in the Jewish people's ability to survive the holocaust and to go forward toward the fulfillment of its role in history.

With his passionate devotion to social justice, Rabbi Silver was impelled to take stands on vital issues in the life of his city, state, and country. His Sunday morning sermons, which supplement the regular Temple services on the Jewish Sabbath, quickly became events of community-wide importance, attracting huge audiences of both Jews and non-Jews. One of the most civic-minded cities of America, Cleveland responded warmly to Abba Hillel Silver, and forward-looking citizens turned to him for guidance and leadership. His unabated popularity has been phenomenal, not merely because he managed to remain a "prophet with honor" in his own community for so many years, but because he has achieved this without aiming at popularity. Never concerned with his professional career as an end in itself, he sought no favors and did not tailor his opinions and actions to conform to prevailing attitudes. Indeed, his words and actions were frequently disturbing to the comfortable and socially unconcerned.

After the First World War, when Cleveland, like so many other American cities, fell prey to the Palmer anti-Red hysteria, Rabbi Silver took the lead in restoring civic sanity. In 1921 he engaged in a running debate with no less formidable an opponent than Newton D. Baker, the former Secretary of War in Wilson's cabinet and one-time Mayor of Cleveland. The issue was the open shop versus the closed shop, with Silver arguing vigorously in support of the labor unions. He resigned from the Chamber of Commerce, of which Baker was then president. But vindication was not long in coming and Cleveland's unions achieved the closed shop.

In 1928 he initiated an enterprise in social pioneering which had tremendous effects. It was due to his vision and energy that The Temple became the birthplace of the unemployment insurance movement in Ohio and perhaps also in the United States. Eight years of unremitting effort on the part of Rabbi Silver and his associates resulted in the passage by the Ohio State Legislature of an unemployment insurance bill which he helped to frame.

During the depression years he was a militant champion of organized labor and an unrelenting foe of the "wreckers" among Ohio's industrialists and financiers. With the intensity of a Biblical prophet he denounced by name the prominent citizens who qualified as "financial jugglers" and "pirates." His zeal stimulated public protests and reform movements which made decency and social responsibility prevail.

The importance and scope of Rabbi Silver's contributions to his community may be gathered from the section on Cleveland in John Gunther's Inside U.S.A. (1947) where he is described as "probably its most distinguished citizen."

All of these works, however, were prologue and preparation for the chief task which was still to come. Silver had retained his intimate association with the Zionist movement from the days of the

Dr. Herzl Zion Club. By 1920 he was well known in Zionist circles as a brilliant young orator and was invited to address the international Zionist conference in London that year, sharing the platform with such eminent personalities as Lord Balfour, Lord Cecil, Dr. Chaim Weizmann, and Max Nordau. In the rift that developed between Dr. Weizmann and Louis D. Brandeis, the leader of American Zionism, Silver strongly supported Brandeis. The conflict, which was ideological in part, involved the control and administration of philanthropic funds raised in the United States for work in Palestine through the efforts of American Zionists. Silver was a loyal member of the group headed by Brandeis and Judge Julian W. Mack, and when Brandeis and Mack withdrew from leadership of the Zionist Organization of America, he went with them. He returned to active service in the movement in the late twenties, accepting Dr. Weizmann's leadership. But his early differences with the head of the World Zionist Organization would recur periodically and, at one critical moment, decisively.

With the rise of Nazism in Germany, Silver reacted with characteristic militancy. He was not content merely with denunciation of Nazi persecutions. Together with Samuel Untermyer he organized the anti-Nazi boycott in the United States. This brought him into sharp conflict with those American Jewish leaders who objected to "provocative" actions which, they held, might worsen the plight of the Jews in Germany. His dire predictions, based on a keen awareness of the evil forces which had been unleashed in the world, were borne out by subsequent horrors.

The immediate importance of Palestine became increasingly apparent with the growing acuteness of the Jewish refugee problem. Huge sums of money were required for the rescue and rehabilitation of the largest possible number of European Jewish refugees—and the greater holocaust was still to come. Regarding this task as the solemn responsibility of American Jewry, Silver undertook a leading role in fund raising, becoming chairman of the United Palestine Appeal in 1938 and also co-chairman of the United Jewish Appeal. The years of his leadership in this sphere were marked by greatly intensified activity and by the establishment and attainment of ever higher fund-raising goals. It is well worth noting that some of the highest peaks in the history of American Jewish fund raising were reached under the leadership of a Zionist rabbi. It would appear—later organizational mythology notwithstanding—that the Zionist label was not a liability in the raising of "big money" and that successful leadership is not necessarily confined to successful businessmen.

In the midst of his fund-raising efforts Dr. Silver was primarily concerned with Zionist statesmanship, rather than mere philanthropy. He made the United Palestine Appeal an instrument of education, which served to prepare American Jewry for the decisive political role that it was to play some years later. He had remained true to the Herzlian vision.

When the Zionist Revolution entered its climactic phase during the Second World War, no cause seemed more hopeless than the goal of a Jewish State in Palestine. The phenomenal progress of the Yishuv, the courageous Jewish community of Palestine, and its significant contributions to the war effort were rewarded by the White Paper policy barring Jewish refugees from the country. While the slaughter of European Jewry was being carried out with methodical efficiency by the Nazis, Great Britain left no doubt about her determination to scuttle her international obligation to assist the development of a Jewish National Home. Nevertheless, World Zionist diplomacy, based in London, clung resolutely to the hope that the partnership with Britain, which had begun so promisingly in 1917 with the issuance of the Balfour Declaration, would be resumed. In such circumstances the very idea of an independent Jewish State was fading fast from the world of political reality, even as this idea became the sustaining hope of the Jewish people, even as the Yishuv was readying itself for the decisive struggle, and even as the Zionist movement was confronted by a never-to-be-repeated opportunity to place its case high on the international agenda and to press for Jewish statehood as an act of world restitution and justice.

Only the entry of a powerful new force in support of the Zionist cause could avert a political disaster and infuse new strength and confidence for the major battles that lay ahead. That force was—had to be—the United States of America. The pivotal fact of the political struggle for Jewish statehood was that its center was shifting—at first slowly, almost imperceptibly, and later with tradition-shattering velocity—from London to Washington, as the center of world leadership generally was moving to an America which had neither sought nor prepared itself for such a role.

To anticipate this major trend and bring the Zionist cause into the mainstream of a historic process, and then to accelerate that process to win international approval of a Jewish State—this was the challenge to Zionist statesmanship. A new type of leadership, closely attuned to the American scene but motivated by classic Zionist concepts, was required. This became the monumental task of Abba Hillel Silver.

He had perceived the trend even before the beginning of the Second World War. A conversation, which took place between Emanuel Neumann and himself at the Twenty-first World Zionist Congress, held in 1939 in Geneva under the shadows of impending war and the recently issued British White Paper, is highly significant in the light of later developments. Neumann urged him to aspire to active political leadership of the Zionist movement in America. He replied that a world war would surely break out soon, that one of its probable results would be a shift of the center of gravity in world affairs to America, and that this would be the appropriate moment for his entry into the political arena. Neumann, then returning to America from a seven-year stay in Palestine, resolved to prepare the ground.

The American Emergency Committee for Zionist Affairs, representing all major parties in the United States, was established in New York in 1940. In the three years that followed Neumann struggled to create a foundation for Zionist political action. Hampered by the inadequate commitment of Zionist colleagues to such a course, as well as by budgetary problems, he nevertheless managed to bring about the formation of the American Palestine Committee, numbering hundreds of members of both Houses of Congress, cabinet members, governors, and many other influential figures in public life. Subsequently he also fostered the formation of a special national committee of Christian clergy, the Christian Council on Palestine, and initiated other important activities in the field of public relations. Official contacts between the Zionist movement and the State Department in Washington were developed and cultivated. However, Neumann was the first to decry the inadequacy of Zionist efforts against the background of slaughter in Europe, perfidy in London, and silence in Washington. He voiced his protest by resigning his post. The ways of personal diplomacy had brought Zionist polity to a dead end. The old methods of shtadlanut, the approaches to governmental leaders by eminent Jews reinforced by nothing more than personal prominence and charm, had been thoroughly discredited.

The new voice and new approach were sounded on May 2, 1943, at the National Conference of the United Palestine Appeal in Philadelphia. Dr. Silver unfolded the Jewish people's condition in all its shocking reality. Then he took the offensive. He attacked not only British policy—criticism of which had been frequently voiced by other Zionist orators—but challenged the attitude of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt himself. ("The tragic problems of the Jewish people in the world today cannot be solved by chiefs of government or prominent officials sending us Rosh Hashanah greetings!") He next summoned the Zionist movement to carry out a program of political action, prophetically describing the outcome:

"We are confident that the inescapable logic of events will in due time make Palestine a Jewish State. For a shorter or longer time this may be halted or retarded, but the rebirth of Israel as a nation in its historic home is as sure to come to pass as God's word never returns empty until it has accomplished that for which it was sent.

"The inescapable logic of events! When all the doors of the world will be closed to our people, then the hand of destiny will force open the door of Palestine. And that hour is rapidly approaching."

His assumption of active political leadership was now an inevitable—and for his opponents, an unavoidable—development. Dr. Weizmann had suggested it in 1942 during a visit to America. He had developed a high appreciation of Silver's talents during the latter's 1942 visit to war-torn London. But Weizmann's proposal had been blocked by some Zionist leaders who feared Silver's militancy and resented his none-too-gentle criticism. Now a group of American Zionists headed by Neumann earnestly requested Silver to head a reorganized Emergency Committee. It was to be called the American Zionist Emergency Council and it would create an imperishable record.

From August, 1943, onward Silver's biography and the history of Israel's establishment become inseparable—for any review of the momentous years that followed his acceptance of the chairmanship of the American Zionist Emergency Council brings into bold relief the decisive influence he exercised in determining the character, policies, and program of Zionism in its most crucial period.

He made a careful—and, as it turned out, accurate—estimate of the many fronts on which he would have to fight. He would have to contend with the British and with Arab propaganda (in those years largely a creation of British policy); with the United States Administration, headed by the most popular of world leaders, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and guided by an anti-Zionist State Department; with the oil interests and with the confusion-spreading anti-Zionist minority in American Jewry—and others as well. His confidence that this array of powerful forces could be—and would be—subdued was not motivated by foolhardy courage, though courage he had in full measure. It was a combination of iron logic and iron nerve which dictated his every action and which he sought to instill in the movement he led. Had he not succeeded in this, had the Zionist movement remained embedded in conventional methods and attitudes, the outcome would surely have been different. Recognizing this at the very outset, he set about to transform the whole character of American Zionism—to convert a club of well intentioned and highly motivated, but politically passive, Zionist personalities into the nerve center of a revolutionary program with a mass following. And since time was short and his own temperament rebelled against procrastination and clever rationalizations, he was often impatient and “difficult” with those who would not or could not meet what he regarded as the clear and unmistakable challenge of the hour.

There was ample evidence that an overwhelming majority of American Jewry was prepared to support the full Zionist program. The opportunity for an impressive demonstration of this fact was at hand at the inaugural gathering of the American Jewish Conference in New York in the late summer of 1943. The resolution favoring a Jewish Commonwealth was violently opposed by the non-Zionist minority and was all but abandoned by prominent Zionist spokesmen in the name of “unity” and in return for non-Zionist support of unlimited Jewish immigration into Palestine. It was saved by Silver’s powerful plea to the delegates to reject such compromises. “If we surrender our national and historic claim to Palestine,” he warned, “and rely solely on the refugee philanthropic appeal, we shall lose our case as well as do violence to the historic hopes of our people.”

The Jewish Commonwealth resolution was adopted by a vote of 502-4.

American Jewish opinion had been crystallized and confirmed. Now the task was to make that opinion a potent force in influencing American policy. This was the responsibility of the American Zionist Emergency Council which within a year became the most effective instrument of public relations and organized action in the history of the Zionist movement and probably in the history of American Jewry. Indeed, in the melancholy and perhaps exaggerated opinion of some targets of the Emergency Council—British Foreign Office spokesmen, United States State Department officials, and Arab propagandists—it was for a time the most successful activity of its kind on the American scene. In its final form it was the handiwork of Dr. Silver—a highly efficient and sensitive instrument, completely responsive to his technique and style.

A Washington Bureau was established and superbly conducted by Rabbi Leon I. Feuer, the many-talented spiritual leader of Toledo, Ohio, who had served as Rabbi Silver’s close associate at The Temple in Cleveland for many years. An intensive program of education on the Palestine problem had to be carried out in Washington. Friends were won in Congress and other areas of government.

The Emergency Council's policies were hammered out in an executive committee composed of representatives of all Zionist parties. This in itself was a formidable task in view of historical differences in ideology and methodology between the parties and their leaders. Inevitably, too, there were clashes of personality which sometimes overshadowed issues; old grudges which intruded into discussions of vital questions and made objective evaluations difficult. Nevertheless, this group was the power center of the organized Zionist movement. It had to be held together and made to function effectively—often against the wishes of some of its own members. Silver achieved this by a combination of reason and power. In political debate his arguments were usually irrefutable. But this alone would not have persuaded the opponents of his militant policy of exerting pressure on the Administration in Washington. His policy had to be backed by the force of public opinion. A mobilized mass movement, dedicated to the realization of his program, would not only be the chief factor in the main struggle for a Jewish State, but would prove vital on the internal front as well. It would enable him to push through his policies and frustrate those of his opponents who were bent on scuttling his program. In any case, his philosophy of Jewish life determined that the leader must seek and obtain his mandate from the people. This he did—and the masses of American Jewry, led by the Zionist rank and file, responded with unprecedented enthusiasm. It soon became clear to the British Foreign Office, the American State Department, and to the leaders of Zionism in the United States and abroad that the overwhelming majority of American Jews strongly supported Abba Hillel Silver.

The Emergency Council's program was carried out by a staff personally directed by Silver, and this was a main factor in its success—apart from the dedication of its members. Many observers of the American Jewish scene have said that never before or since was there a staff performance to approximate that of the Emergency Council team which functioned from late 1943 through 1948. It was not a very large group by present organizational standards, though the allegations of its anti-Zionist enemies created the flattering impression of a heavily financed army of propagandists. The anonymity of many of its most important members is a deficiency in the recorded history of Zionism which will, one day, be corrected. For example, the name of Harry L. Shapiro, the devoted and profoundly human executive director of the Emergency Council, surely belongs in any record of Israel's emergence. The Silver method excluded any dichotomy between the leader and the professional executive. Key executives of the Emergency Council became his close and loyal friends and, when occasion required, fighters for his policies and program.

The history of the Palestine Resolution which was introduced in both Houses of Congress early in 1944 is an object lesson in political action within the American democracy. The sponsorship was impressive—in the Senate it was called the Wagner-Taft Resolution; in the House, the Wright-Compton Resolution. The primary purpose of the bipartisan measure was later explained by Silver in an address to the convention of the Zionist Organization of America: "If our cause was to be placed on the national and international agenda, if the attention of the American people and of the world was ever to be drawn forcibly to our problem on the eve of the effective date of the White Paper, and if the official silence in Washington was ever to be broken, the most effective, perhaps the only way in which it could be done, was by producing the discussion of our problem in the world's greatest forum of opinion—the Congress of the United States. What happens there is news, national and international. In fact, the very discussion of a problem before such a forum is a political event.

"Our investigation indicated beyond any reasonable doubt that sentiment among the members of Congress was highly favorable. Our nationwide poll, taken by our three hundred community contact groups all over the country before we introduced the resolutions, made it clear that when and if the resolutions came to a vote they would pass by very large majorities."

But the resolutions did not come to a vote. The Administration brought about a postponement of action through the intervention of the War Department, which argued for delay on military grounds. In response to the strong public resentment which this evoked, President Roosevelt, after a meeting with Dr. Silver and Dr. Stephen S. Wise, authorized the two Zionist leaders to issue a public statement in his name to the effect that "the American Government has never given its approval to the White Paper of 1939 . . . and that when future decisions are reached full justice will be done to those who seek a Jewish National Home."

Only later was it learned that immediately after the issuance of this and subsequent pro-Zionist pronouncements by the President of the United States, the State Department sent reassuring messages to Arab governments, advising them that there had actually been no change in American policy.

Silver refused to let the matter rest with Roosevelt's statement. He felt that the President's declaration should not be considered a substitute for Congressional action, but a powerful argument for speedy passage of the Palestine Resolution. He was, moreover, convinced that the "military" objections to the resolution would be withdrawn if sufficient public pressure was exerted on the Administration. The Emergency Council therefore held a great rally in New York's Madison Square Garden—the first of many huge mass demonstrations that would take place at critical moments of the struggle.

Silver then shifted the Zionist political front to Chicago, where the national conventions of the Republican and Democratic parties were to take place. Intensive efforts by the Zionist representatives at the conventions brought about the adoption of unequivocal Jewish Commonwealth planks in the platforms of both parties.

There is a widespread tendency to write off the platforms of our major parties as pronouncements dictated exclusively by expediency, designed solely for vote-catching purposes, and therefore not really binding on the winning party. If this cynical view has any validity, the fault lies chiefly with some of the best elements in American society. Their own attitude is what, in the end, determines the seriousness and the binding character of party declarations. If they choose to regard the platform of the party in power as a solemn commitment and insist on action to redeem the party's pledge, they may be astonished to find that platforms are highly meaningful. The author was one of those engaged in the effort to secure the 1944 pro-Zionist planks in Chicago and the 1948 pro-Israel planks in Philadelphia, and can assure the cynics that they were not lightly or easily adopted. Moreover, their subsequent significance on the highest political level was unquestionable—simply because the organized Zionist movement chose to view them as serious declarations of policy and proceeded accordingly.

The wisdom of Silver's policy of seeking support from both of the major parties (a political truism today, but an unsettling concept for some Zionist leaders during the Roosevelt era) was strongly illustrated when President Roosevelt was induced to affirm his support of the Palestine plank in the Democratic platform. His memorable message to the convention of the Zionist Organization of America in October, 1944, had been immediately preceded by the pro-Zionist declaration of the Republican candidate for the Presidency, Governor Thomas E. Dewey. The "military" objections to passage of the Palestine Resolution were removed in a letter from Secretary of War Stimson to Senator Robert A. Taft, co-sponsor of the measure, and it was decided that the matter be reopened in Congress. Clearance was sought from President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Stettinius; but notwithstanding the Democratic Party's declaration and Roosevelt's own statement, the Administration opposed action. On December 11, 1944, Stettinius appeared personally before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and argued against the Palestine Resolution in the name of the Administration. Such pressure from the Executive Branch made it impossible to pass the measure and it was tabled by a bare majority.

Within the American Zionist Emergency Council the situation was even more discouraging. When the Administration's opposition was encountered, a violent dispute developed. Those Zionist leaders who preferred to rely on Roosevelt's promise that he would, at some future date, support Zionist aspirations opposed further action which might prove embarrassing to the just-re-elected President or incur his hostility. Silver, on the other hand, felt that every effort should be made to induce the Administration to withdraw its opposition. Unfortunately, the proponents of these two views adopted separate and conflicting procedures in Washington. Thus, while Silver was pressing for a change in the Administration's attitude toward the resolution, other Zionist leaders were assuring public officials that they would not seek action against Roosevelt's wishes. The tabling of the resolution was, in these circumstances, inevitable, and Silver was forced to resign from leadership of the American Zionist Emergency Council.

The heated controversy in American Zionism which followed these developments proved to be an essential phase in the political education of the movement and of American Jewry. Silver's supporters sprang to the defense of his policies. Led by Neumann and organized by executives of the Emergency Council who had resigned in protest following Silver's removal from leadership, they formed the American Zionist Policy Committee which conducted a whirlwind campaign for the recall of Dr. Silver. In six months of debate between the "Silver activists" and the "Wise moderates" the central issue was crystallized: "The most effective representation (to leaders of government) in a democracy is through organized public opinion . . . Zionist leaders who cannot whole-heartedly join in such an effort, or who are too entangled in party politics to appraise situations objectively and to follow an independent Zionist line should step aside. We have nothing to lose now but our illusions. We have a new life to build for our people!" This was the essence of Silver's challenge.

It was taken up by the vast majority of American Zionists. After President Roosevelt's death and the disclosure of his secret correspondence with King Ibn Saud, the demand for Silver's return to political leadership became ever more insistent. In July, 1945, he was recalled to head the American Zionist Emergency Council and shortly thereafter he was also elected President of the Zionist Organization of America.

The Palestine Resolution was reintroduced in Congress, with Dr. Neumann representing the Zionist position in Washington. Opposition on the part of the State Department under President Truman was no less vigorous than it had been under President Roosevelt. But this time the Zionist ranks could not be split. After a full debate in the Senate, the resolution was overwhelmingly adopted on December 19, 1945.

The lessons taught by Dr. Silver during this period were to be applied definitively during the next three years. The rank and file, if not all Zionist leaders, now understood that a Jewish State could not be won by appeals to vague humanitarianism and that the tragic plight of European Jewry was not, in itself, a persuasive argument for action by the world's leaders. The Zionist case had to be backed by political force—and the movement had come to realize that it was not without real political bargaining power. It had the increasingly strong and determined Yishuv in Palestine, and it had the growing support of American Jewry, the largest Jewish community in history. Now it had, too, the full endorsement of the Legislative Branch of the United States Government and the backing of millions of non-Jewish American citizens. It could no longer be put off or ignored and would henceforth address itself to the Executive Branch with greater confidence and far better results.

Silver's clashes with the Roosevelt Administration had led some of his opponents to attribute partisan political motives to his actions. In certain instances their own involvement in the affairs of the Democratic Party caused them to think in such partisan terms. Silver was a Republican, hence bent on embarrassing and defeating Democrats. For them it was as simple—and crude—as that. His friendship with his fellow-Ohioan, Senator Taft, was, moreover, proof that he was a "reactionary" to boot.

He never bothered to reply to these insinuations. He was disdainful of labels like "liberal" and "reactionary." In Ohio he had supported both Democrats and Republicans for high public office, always seeking the better man. In national affairs he had strongly supported the New Deal during Roosevelt's first two terms. He had opposed a third term for Roosevelt and had announced his support of Wendell Willkie (whom many liberals belatedly recognized as one of their own). He had awakened Robert A. Taft's interest in the Zionist cause early in the latter's political career and had carefully nurtured the Senator's Zionist sympathies which, in the end, became a powerful factor in determining the course of American policy on Israel. As for his political views, he was quite content to let the record speak for itself. A review of that record—of the positions he has taken on both national and international issues—makes it clear that neither of our great political parties fully encompasses his political and social philosophy. If there were those who preferred to regard his program of political action as pro-Republican in purpose, he merely shrugged and went on with his work. His attitude proved advantageous to the Zionist cause during the Roosevelt and Truman Administrations, in view of their concern about the way in which "that Republican rabbi" might exploit the shortcomings of their Palestine policies.

Silver's initial assessment of President Truman was hopeful where Zionist aspirations were concerned. As a good Missourian the new President would "have to be shown." He would have to be convinced that American public opinion truly supported the establishment of a Jewish State, but once so convinced he would move forward. This analysis proved to be amazingly correct—though it was Silver's sometimes unpleasant duty to create the kind of public pressure which, while serving to persuade the President, also irritated him. Such a relationship may not cement personal friendships, but it can make for good politics, American style. In this instance, it helped to bring about the establishment of the State of Israel.

Silver was not similarly hopeful about the new Labor Government which had come to power in Britain at war's end. He urged restraint and a wait-and-see attitude on his Zionist colleagues, some of whom were prepared for dancing in the streets in view of the Labor Party's official position on Palestine—a policy declaration that was more "maximal" than the World Zionist program. The rude awakening was not long in coming. The White Paper policy was to be continued, and by one who would prove to be a bitter and vengeful foe—Ernest Bevin.

In August, 1945, President Truman sent his famous letter to Prime Minister Attlee requesting that 100,000 certificates be granted for the immigration of Jews into Palestine. The British Government countered with the suggestion that an Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry be set up to investigate the position of the Jews of Europe, as well as the situation in Palestine. Silver refused to cooperate with the Committee, correctly appraising it as a delaying device and an excuse for inaction.

The Anglo-American Committee completed its report at the end of April, 1946. Silver immediately initiated representations in Washington, and President Truman, in releasing the text of the report, issued a statement which drew an important distinction between the positive recommendation that 100,000 homeless Jews be transferred to Palestine immediately, and the long-term recommendations which were opposed to Zionist aspirations.

However, there was no action on the 100,000 certificates. Instead, a Cabinet Committee was appointed on June 11, 1946. The product of the discussions between the deputy members of this committee and a corresponding British group was the "Morrison-Grady Report," which was actually Foreign Secretary Bevin's favorite scheme for the federalization of Palestine. This plan would have put an end to the idea of an independent Jewish State. Silver called for the full mobilization of American Jewry against it and, under pressure of an aroused and indignant public opinion, President Truman was persuaded to reject it. Bevin's fury against the "New York Jews" and the rabbi who led them was echoed in large sections of the British press which sought, without success, to discredit Dr. Silver.

Meanwhile, a carefully designed trap was being laid. With their guns pointing at the heart of the Yishuv, the British were projecting a round-table conference with the Jews and the Arabs. It was reported that the British would be willing to entertain a proposal for the partition of Palestine if such a proposal were to emanate from the Jewish Agency. The Executive of the Jewish Agency, meeting in Paris in August, 1946, responded that "it is prepared to discuss a proposal for the establishment of a viable Jewish State in an adequate area of Palestine." Silver, who had not been present at the Paris meeting, denounced this action as an enormous tactical blunder, declaring: "If it is true that the present Government of Great Britain is unwilling to grant us statehood in even part of Palestine, and the record of the present British Government is very clear on this subject, what point is there in making one grand gesture of renunciation after another and in publicly proclaiming our readiness for supreme sacrifices when our gestures are disdained and our sacrifices are contemned?"

He demanded a reaffirmation of the Biltmore Program calling for the reconstitution of all of Palestine as a Jewish Commonwealth, adding: "When proposals will be made to us by governments, which we will find truly reasonable and which will meet our fundamental needs and satisfy our national aspirations and our sense of justice, the whole movement will be prepared, I am sure, to give them every serious consideration. . . . Sound and just proposals are bound to be made to us sooner or later if we do not lose our nerve and our perspective." He resigned from the Jewish Agency Executive, determined to bring about a decisive disavowal of its action at the World Zionist Congress.

The fateful Twenty-second World Zionist Congress—the first since the beginning of the war in 1939—opened at Basle, Switzerland, on December 9, 1946. It was to make one of the most momentous decisions in modern Jewish history. The underlying issue was clear from the very outset: would the Zionist movement persist in its efforts to achieve its goals through Great Britain, or would the Congress terminate a relationship which had become tragically unhappy and which foretold political disaster for the movement? The lines were drawn on the specific question of the London conference announced by the British Government for January, 1947, with the participation of representatives of the Arab states and of the Jewish Agency. Was the Jewish Agency to go to London in order to propose partition as its solution of the Palestine question, or would the Congress reaffirm the Biltmore Program?

Dr. Chaim Weizmann, President of the Jewish Agency and of the World Zionist Organization, was emphatically in favor of participation in the London conference on the basis of the partition proposal which the Jewish Agency Executive had put forward the preceding summer—and he made it clear that his future leadership of the World Zionist Organization depended on whether the Congress would support his stand. Dr. Silver was the chief spokesman against the course of action proposed by Dr. Weizmann. Declaring that it was bad tactics for Zionists to have proposed partition, he categorically opposed any proposal which would establish partition as the maximal Zionist position in international discussions of Palestine's future. He contended that this would inevitably result in the further whittling down of Jewish rights in order to arrive at a new compromise solution. Underlying his position was the confident expectation that a reasonable partition proposal would be offered to the Zionists (as indeed it was in 1947 by the United Nations Special Committee on Palestine) if only the movement would stand firm.

Another major issue at the Congress was the Jewish resistance movement in Palestine. On this question, too, there was a sharp difference between Weizmann and Silver. Weizmann deprecated physical resistance to the British regime in Palestine and deplored "the heroics of suicidal violence" on the part of Jewish youth. He urged instead

"the courage of endurance, the heroism of superhuman restraint." Silver, on the other hand, hailed the resistance movement as one of the chief factors in the creation of a Jewish State and pledged his help to it.

Soon after the Congress a frustrated British Government, in its meetings with Zionist leaders, revealed the plan for Palestine which it had hoped would emerge as a compromise between the White Paper policy and a Jewish Agency partition formula. The British solution turned out to be an inferior edition of the Morrison-Grady federalization plan. The soundness of the "Silver line" which the Congress had adopted was further demonstrated when Bevin, having been defeated in his attempts to impose a Palestine solution unilaterally, had no alternative but to announce that the British Government would refer the Palestine question to the United Nations—though some Zionists were alarmed by the British move. Many observers anticipated that the Jews would suffer a crushing defeat in the United Nations; not without reason, for the balance of forces did not, in the beginning, seem to favor the Zionist cause.

As head of the newly established American Section of the Jewish Agency, Dr. Silver was now charged with the enormous responsibility of directing the preparation and presentation of the Jewish case before the United Nations. He proved to be no less skilled in the arts of diplomacy than in the techniques of political action. He and his colleagues sought and won the understanding and, ultimately, the support of members of widely divergent blocs and groupings of nations.

Two years earlier he had boldly declared that the Zionist movement should seek support not only in Britain and the United States, but from the nations of the world generally—including the Soviet Union. This struck many as incredibly naïve, in view of the Soviet Union's consistent record of violent hostility to Zionism. Others applied stronger epithets to his proposal, though finding it difficult to reconcile "radical" with "reactionary." The appropriate word, of course, should have been "statesmanlike," as was shown when the Soviet Union—motivated by self-interest, to be sure—supported the establishment of a Jewish State in the United Nations debate.

Convinced that the results of the United Nations deliberations would depend largely on the position that would be taken by the United States, Silver once again mobilized American Jewry and the non-Jewish supporters of the Zionist cause. The case for a Jewish State became a burning issue throughout America.

On April 28, 1947, the United Nations General Assembly opened its first session on Palestine. After prolonged debate an invitation to present its case was extended to the Jewish Agency. On May 8th a unique event took place. A spokesman of the Jewish people sat in a council chamber together with the official representatives of the nations of the world and formally voiced the demands of his people for national recognition and for the right to reestablish a national state in their ancestral home. It was a moment rich in drama and in historic significance. Dr. Silver's persuasive address, as well as his subsequent appearances before the United Nations, brought a new sense of pride and dignity to Jews the world over.

Silver's strategy proved to be decisive in the achievement of the United Nations Partition Resolution. During the last nerve-wracking days of the General Assembly's session it was by no means certain that the necessary two-thirds majority would be obtained for the resolution. The outcome depended entirely on whether the United States would use its great influence with the nations which normally follow its lead and urge them to vote in favor of the plan. Some representatives of the State Department were not at all helpful. As the time for the vote approached, the issue was very much in doubt. A last-minute respite was afforded by the Thanksgiving holiday, and during those critical twenty-four hours the Jewish Agency delegation exerted the most strenuous efforts to avert defeat. Silver, Moshe Shertok (Sharett), Neumann, and all their colleagues of the Jewish Agency Executive were indefatigable, as were the members of the Jewish Agency staff, including Abba Eban, Eliahu Epstein (Elath), Moshe Toff, to name only a few. The cooperation of many other Jewish leaders and friends of the cause was quickly enlisted. The results of this concerted effort were discernible when the United States delegation warmly urged other nations to follow its lead in support of the partition plan. On November 29, 1947, by a vote of 33-13, the General Assembly gave international sanction to the establishment of a Jewish State.

In a moving description of that memorable day, Neumann writes: "One by one we left the hall and drifted into the lobby. We were all overcome by emotion. I glanced at Silver and saw what I had never seen before—he wept."

While a Jewish State had been voted by the United Nations, it was far from established. The British now devised a series of schemes to frustrate the will of the United Nations and upset its decision. By systematically disarming the Jews and arming the Arabs, they anticipated that the Jewish State would be unable to defend itself against the Arab onslaught and that, consequently, British forces would be in a position again to take over control in Palestine. In order to carry out this plan the British Government had to ensure that the United Nations Security Council would do nothing to halt the Arabs' attacks or to implement the Partition Resolution. However, the British miscalculated two vital factors. They underestimated the determination of the Yishuv to stand firm even against the most discouraging odds, and they believed that, in cooperation with their friends in the United States Department of State, they would be able to win—and hold—American support.

For a time they were remarkably successful. A shocking reversal of United States policy took place on March 19, 1948. The American Government argued in favor of an international trusteeship over Palestine in place of partition. For almost two months the United States delegation worked to reverse the November 29th decision and to substitute its trusteeship plan. During this period Silver devoted himself chiefly to the activities of the American Zionist Emergency Council, which gave massive expression to public indignation over the Administration's reversal. On April 4, 1948, an estimated 50,000 Jewish war veterans paraded down New York's Fifth Avenue in protest against the State Department's betrayal, while 250,000 demonstrators denounced the Administration at a rally in Madison Square Park.

Silver and his colleagues conducted a simultaneous offensive in the United Nations against the United States trusteeship scheme. In the Security Council and in the Political Committee of the General Assembly he presented effective refutations of the arguments which had been employed to justify the United States proposal.

The Jewish Agency's representatives had succeeded in defeating every attempt of the British and American delegates to bring about a repudiation of the Partition Resolution. As the May 15th deadline for the proclamation of the Jewish State approached, representatives of the State Department tried a last-minute gambit to avert the proclamation. They sought to engage the Jewish Agency in a round-table conference and proposed a temporary trusteeship arrangement. They implied that this proposal was supported by the President and coupled the offer with threats of dire consequences if it were rejected. Some Jewish leaders—including men who were soon to become high dignitaries of the new Government of Israel and of the World Zionist Organization—were ensnared by this maneuver and were prepared to accept the State Department's plan. They had been persuaded that the alternative might be the physical destruction of the Yishuv. Silver, however, insisted that the sole purpose of the proposal was to postpone indefinitely the establishment of the Jewish State. He believed that David Ben-Gurion was determined to proceed with the proclamation and, moreover, that only the Jews of Palestine could make the final decision, since it would have to be underwritten with their blood. All that he and his colleagues could do was to offer a political judgment, leaving the ultimate decision up to the Yishuv. At the same time, Silver felt, the action that would be taken by the American Section of the Jewish Agency could either fortify Ben-Gurion's position or weaken it. This was, therefore, the most crucial action ever to be taken by the American Section. Fortunately, a bare majority voted with Silver to inform Ben-Gurion that they had rejected the State Department's offer.

On May 14, 1948, the State of Israel was proclaimed, and the President of the United States announced de facto recognition—even as American delegates to the United Nations were still busily engaged in trying to block the establishment of the State.

On that day, too, Abba Hillel Silver, in the last of his appearances before the United Nations, said: "At ten o'clock this morning the Jewish State was proclaimed in Palestine. . . . Thus, there has been consummated the age-old dream of Israel to be reestablished as a free and independent people in its ancient homeland.

"The Jewish State is grateful to the United Nations for having placed the stamp of its approval, and the stamp of the approval of the world community, upon the historic claims of Israel, and for the efforts which it made in the face of opposition to achieve that which the Jewish people have accomplished. The Jewish State, in setting out upon its career, is conscious of the many grave problems, foreseen or unanticipated, which confront it. It prayerfully appeals, therefore, to all freedom-loving peoples, and especially to those who gave their fullest endorsement to the establishment of the Jewish State a few months ago, to give a full measure of their support and of their strengthening to this newest republic established by this, the most ancient of peoples. The Jewish State will strive to be worthy of the confidence which has been placed in it by the nations of the world, and will endeavor to realize, as far as it is humanly possible, those prophetic ideas of justice, brotherhood, peace and democracy which were first proclaimed by the people of Israel in that very land."

He had completed his greatest work.

The leaders of the new Government of Israel lost no time in showing their appreciation. There is irony—and, for the Zionist movement, tragedy—in the fact that almost immediately after he had achieved this triumph, Dr. Silver was compelled to resign from leadership of the movement. The internal conflict which precipitated his resignation was presumably over the management of fund raising for Israel in the United States. It is now generally understood that this was a false issue, and that the real question was the negative attitude of Israel's leaders toward the post-State Zionist movement. Silver's philosophy of Zionism—all-encompassing in its view of Jewish history and the Jewish people in their entirety—could never be reconciled with Ben-Gurion's negation of all Zionist activity that is not Israel-centered or State-based.

Realizing that a prolonged controversy with the Government of Israel on the question of the funds could destroy the campaign of the United Jewish Appeal, which was indispensable for Israel's survival, Silver preferred to resign his chairmanship of the American Section of the Jewish Agency. The underlying issues of that conflict are, thirteen years later, still being debated. Validation of Silver's position has been amply provided, particularly by those Zionist leaders who had opposed and succeeded him in 1949, but who adopted his views when they were confronted by Ben-Gurion's unabated ideological warfare against the movement.

Silver's withdrawal from active Zionist leadership did not, of course, affect his profound commitment to Israel's growth and development. His frequent, though for the most part unpublicized, interventions in Washington at crucial moments of Israel's recent history; his distinguished services as Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Israel Bond organization, and especially his incisive analyses of major political developments—these have kept him at the center of affairs. For the masses of American Jewry he is the living symbol of their own greatest moment.

Once again he found time for scholarship and for writing. His Where Judaism Differed appeared in 1956. It is an extraordinary blending of painstaking research with a strong reaffirmation of Judaism's distinctiveness and of its rational character. Existentialist fad-dists or those interested in jet flights to salvation will derive no comfort from this book, but it has all the qualities of a permanent contribution to the literature on Judaism.

Moses and the Original Torah (1961) is a scholarly quest for the pure faith of Moses imbedded in the Pentateuch. Rabbi Silver finds the classic impulses of Judaism in that original Torah and in the moral revolution wrought by Moses, "throneless monarch of a spiritual kingdom."

That he himself has been motivated by these same impulses and by the prophetic tradition is manifestly clear from his life and work.

The public image of Dr. Silver differs considerably from the man. His overpowering personality on the platform, his forcefulness in debate, and his fighting spirit have obscured other qualities. The first word that comes to mind is simplicity—a directness of approach, a quick arrival at the heart of the matter—a quality which one tends to associate with great artists. With friends he is hearty and warm. His enjoyment of life is huge and without ambivalence.

Abba Hillel Silver, Jewish statesman, taught a generation and trained it for the privilege of experiencing Israel's rebirth. He poured his gifts—his very soul—into this generation, and it became strong and proud. He has ennobled his time.

My dear and praiseworthy friend Wilmer:
Please excuse me for not answering your letter of Dec. 3, 1963 until now. For reasons known to you I had to reduce to five days a week my good nurse that I have. For the first ten days she stayed with me 17 days a week 8 hours a day amounting to $170.00 dollars per week (20.00 daily)
Now I reduced to 5 days per week to 4 hrs a day at 10 dollars. She gets 50.00 per week.
I belong to NRTA Insurance Plan and they pay part of the salary for the nurse.
But they don't pay for the Therapy my wife and I get every week.
I am interested to know what work you do with the Department of Health, Education and Welfare? How I envy you by being so wonderfully occupied!

I read various articles in the Hebrew,
Yiddish, and English ^{languages} ^{as} concerns Abba Hirsch Silver. I certainly agree with you in your evaluation of our good friend Rabbi Silver.
I am just reading his book in Hebrew, called ? מ'פ' ד' ד' מ'פ' ד' ד' In English this means: "In what way does Judaism differ?"

I also read his interesting book in English, entitled "Moses".
I dare say that Rabbi Silver was the Jewish Intellectual, the greatest Counsel man among American Jews. Besides this
He was + h e Zionist in our midst.

May he rest in peace for

I have a few other things to write to ^{you} I will do so as soon as I can.

My Dear Good Friend:

From your letter of December 21, 1963 it would seem that you are making a little progress health wise and I hope also that your wife is feeling better. I know that you are under severe handicap and it is difficult, one must always have courage and you have a great deal of that.

You ask me what work I do with the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. I presently am a member of a committee in the Public Health Service under the National Institutes of Health which is a sort of an umbrella committee, created to give all of the nine institutes of health help that each institute standing on its own cannot do. For example, every institute under N.I.H. at times needs animals for research and most of the institutes such as cancer, blindness, heart and many others require a total of millions of animals per year. It is very difficult to find in the open market animals of pure strain. The committee of which I am pledged to be a member is interested in providing the funds in order to build facilities which will raise research animals of pure strain and furnish them to various institutes that require same for research purposes.

Another good example is that it costs millions of dollars to have I.B.M. computers which today help greatly in advancing knowledge and in doing things mechanically, accurately and quickly which has not been possible to do by using manpower alone. Let us say that it takes three million dollars to install a computer in a certain district. Our committee provides this money to have an I.B.M. computer installed and make same available to a group of medical schools and other research establishments which are continually at work in the field of research to help find the answer unknown to science to the various problems of the diseases which lay men low.

This committee is under the able direction of Dr. Fred Stone, whom I have known and worked with since 1950. Dr. Stone is an able PhD, is known to every medical school, hospital and researcher throughout the United States and in many places of the world. He is one of the able directors of the National Institutes of Health and works always in an unselfish, devoted way to advance the various causes having to do with basic research, clinical research and the application of the results of such research to the hospitals and the patients who come for cure.

Ultimately, the end purpose of all research is to help sick men get well and to prevent, through research, people getting sick. This will give you a general idea of the efforts of the committee on which I serve. I am the least of those able to contribute to this important cause. However, I have a basic understanding of its problems and in a practical way try to do all that I can to advance the work of the committee. I thought you might be interested in having a list of the people who are presently members of the National Advisory Research Resources Committee and their affiliation. I trust that this explanation in part at least may answer your question. I enjoy the work and spend all of the time that is necessary to advance its purposes and hope that progress may result.

I am glad to note that you have such a high regard for our late good friend, Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver. He was indeed a wonderful man who deserves all of the praise that came to him in his lifetime and certainly now that he is gone. Such expression of yours with respect to him is well said and truly deserved.

I need not again repeat, keep a stiff upper chin, keep plugging away. I hope that the New Year will bring you better days health wise and otherwise.

As always your good friend, I am

Sincerely,

J. M. Ulmer

Dear Dan:

I heard that it is possible to purchase some of the recordings of your dad's speeches. Could you send me a list of the recordings available and advise me how to order these recordings.

Abba Hillel was one of my heroes, and I would like very much to have, especially, his address before the United Nations in 1947.

Many thanks and kind regards.

Dear Rabbi Silver:

I meant to write this letter for a long time. But hectic days pass quickly and a certain shyness inhibits me often to do the right things at the right time. While I try to overcome it at this moment I might as well tell you that my husband and I feel a strong sense of communication with the Temple, especially through you essays in the Temple Bulletin. Every week we look forward to them and read them attentively and discuss them. They give stimulus for thought and also an example from your courage to take a responsible stand to issues and problems as the times present. So let me thank you.

I wanted to write to you about two incidents that stand out in my mind about your father. They may seem insignificant in a great life as that of your father. But to me as a parent they became a heartwarming experience as well as a valuable lesson. Both happened at children's services. The first, in Mahler Hall (long before the Temple was remodelled). The Service was in progress and Dr. Silver walked along the rows of children when a little girl sang out loud and clear, "Hi, Rabbi". Another man might have thought decorum more important at the time and stifled and hushed such genuine affection, but he took the little outstretched hand, patted her hair and in a most loving voice replied, "Hi, Honey." The other time, before a service in the main temple, teen-agers were herding into the pews and in a group of rambunctious boys one acted particularly silly. With measured steps Dr. Silver walked up to him and in a powerful whisper told him, "Sit down, you dope". It was effective. Here too, another man of similar stature might not have cared enough or perhaps found it below his dignity to act and left it someone else to correct the situation. The experience left me with a very special fondness for your father and I wanted to share it with you.

The last Sunday your father spoke at the Temple we somehow overcame our usual reticence and walked up to him after the sermon, talked to him and shook his hand. We are so glad of it.

The best of wishes to you and your mother and your family.

Rabbi Daniel J. Silver

Dear Rabbi Silver,

I am a fourth year student at the Hebrew Union College. As such, I am now making the necessary preparations for beginning my senior thesis. After due consultation with my thesis advisor, I have decided to undertake a study of the patterns of leadership among American rabbis. Being a native Cleveland, and being numbered among the many admirers of your late father, it is my earnest desire that I might utilize Abba Hillel Silver as the central focus of my thesis. I believe that such a study of the rabbinical leadership of Dr. Silver could prove to be of real value to all those who would seek inspiration from his lofty example.

I am therefore writing to you with a two-fold purpose: to ask whether you would be able to meet with me to discuss certain pertinent areas of concern, and to see whether The Temple would permit me to examine such sermons and writings of Dr. Silver which it might have in its possession and which would be relevant to the topic. As I will be in Cleveland on February 7th and 8th, I hope that we might have the opportunity to meet briefly at that time.

I hope that you will be able to agree to my requests, for otherwise such a work could not possibly be undertaken. I look forward to hearing from you soon and to being able to meet with you again.

With sincere appreciation,

Dear Rabbi Silver:

Please forgive me for being so late in acknowledging receipt of your kind note of December 6th. Thank you heartily for informing me of the notation on your late father's desk to send me a congratulatory message on the occasion of the recent dinner of the American Technion Society. Thank you also for your own congratulations and kind words about me.

Your father and I were co-workers in the same high cause for more than forty years. In the controversies and differences which developed in the American Zionist movement during that long period of time, your father and I were always, I think, on the same side. I valued his friendship very highly; and in the last dozen years or so, I came to appreciate more and more the great and noble work which he was doing here in America for the enlightenment of the community at large. I regard his last two published books as particularly valuable in this regard.

You undoubtedly are and should be proud of having had such a father. I hope and believe that you will worthily carry on his great work in your Rabbinate.

Yours sincerely,

An archivist is now at work organizing this material. Enclosed is a letter from Moshe Kol about the proposed project in Israel, Bet Abba Hillel. It seems quite all-right to me. The only condition that I would make is that no individuals should be approached for contributions before there are definite and substantial commitments from the Government of Israel and the Jewish Agency. If these two provide a good start, then there is the likelihood of a successful consummation of the project.

Please consult mother and Raphael about it promptly and let me know, so that I can advise our people in Israel.

Dr. Emanuel Neumann, President
World Union of General Zionists
515 Park Avenue
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Emanuel:

When I came to New York I presented to you the idea of the Liberal Party and the Israeli Executive of the World Union in Israel to build the Beth Abba Hillel in memory and name of Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, a center for building up young leadership for the General Zionist Movement in the world and for the Liberal Party in Israel. We intend to have an institution like Beth Berel and we want to have it near Kibbutz Tel Yitzchak which is in the middle of the road between Tel Aviv and Matanya. We hope to get substantial allocations for this institution from the Jewish Agency Executive and from the Israeli Government because precedents were already established after the passing away of Josef Sprinzak and Gloria Josephthal.

In addition, the Liberal Party intends to sell some property in Tel Aviv and to invest this money also to build the institution. We want to start with a program of $1,000,000 which is IL 3,000,000 of which approximately one half will be raised in Israel by the Jewish Agency, the Government, the Liberal Party and others. Two thirds of the IL 3,000,000 will be invested to establish the buildings and one third will be the beginning of a foundation of which the interest will be used to maintain this institution. In addition, the World Union and the Liberal Party will allocate yearly budgets for this purpose. We want to have a special Board of sponsors and also an Executive to raise the funds for this institution and for the running of it. In this fund raising we want to involve the General Zionists all over the world and we hope for a success. The Jewish Agency established already another precedent for a one time fund raising for a similar institution when they granted the Herut movement the permission to raise the funds for Beth Jabotinsky.

I would like to announce, together with my friends in Israel, the decision to build this institution after my return and I hope that you and Dr. Silver's family will consent and encourage us in this decision. About the fund raising for this program we will work out the details in joint cooperation with the head office of the World Union and the ZOA President and officers. Maybe, here in the U.S. it can be done jointly for this institution and for Kfar Silver.

I promised you to give you the general lines. Here they are. I am now going home with the hope to start immediately on the implementation.

Many thanks for your cooperation.

Dear Daniel:

I think that you and mother will be interested in learning about the memorial service that was planned by the North Shore Fellowship of Rabbis and at which I had the privilege of giving the major address, this past Sunday.

It was a beautiful service, conducted with great dignity and the music was especially lovely. Despite the fact that it was a beautiful Sunday afternoon on the North Shore, a fairly good number turned out for the service.

My fond greetings to you all, and I do hope to see you soon.

Sincerely,

Rabbi Arthur J. Lelyveld

Dear Friend, Shalom

Although I have written an article on the life and work of your father of blessed memory, I see now that I still have not sent you and your family the sincere expression of my feelings.

It is not for me to tell you that being the son of Abba Hillel Silver means so much in Judaism of our time. I know by knowing you that not only you feel this responsibility, but you are able and willing to help whatever you can do in the service of Judaism.

Please extend my kindest greetings to your mother, your wife and your brother. May the memory of your beloved and great father be a source of permanent blessing for your children.

Dear Emanuel:

I have again spoken of Kol's project with Mother. The family is agreed that we would prefer that this project not go forward. Dad's name is associated with two fine programs in Israel, the Hebrew University Library and Kfar Silver, and it would be Dad's wish that these be fully and properly supported. I doubt also that Dad was enough of a "party" man to want his name to be associated with a party institution.

Will you please thank Mr. Kol for his interest in this matter. We are deeply appreciative.

Mrs. Abba Hillel Silver

Dear Mrs. Silver:

One of our current projects is the collection of papers of important twentieth century American clergymen and theologians. Your husband was a distinguished rabbi and it is therefore only fitting that his manuscripts should be permanently preserved in a research institution such as ours. In recognition of his work and achievements, we hope you will give us the opportunity to establish an Abba Hillel Silver Manuscript Collection as a lasting memorial. This collection would also be an important historical resource for the faculty and students of our Department of Religion and for the scholarly world in general. Researchers will thus be given insights into historical trends and events which otherwise might have been denied them.

The collection would include letters and general correspondence files, personal records, journals and diaries, manuscripts of essays, books and articles, papers relating to interests, associations, activities, family and friends, and documents concerned with his rabbinical career. At Syracuse University Library, the manuscripts will be kept in a room especially planned for the maintenance of research collections. In addition, the papers will be processed and placed in order, shelved in fire-resistant archival boxes, and inventoried enabling scholars to realize the nature of the collection. The use of such material is governed by an agreement made between the University and the donor.

Will you and other members of the family please give our suggestions serious consideration and then let us know your thoughts on the matter.

Dear Jeremy:

During the past twelve years, many people have heard me talk about my plans for the dual biography of Stephen S. Wise and John Haynes Holmes and have said, "Let me know when it's to be published and be sure to send me an autographed copy." I am now writing to tell you that on Monday, April 27th, the World Publishing Company will publish Rabbi and Minister.

I wish I could mail you the book as a gift; but a publisher gives an author only six copies of his book and these are absorbed by his immediate family. Therefore let me refer you to your local bookstore, or suggest that you fill in the order blank of the enclosed folder and mail it to: Drewdale Books, 999 Madison Avenue, New York 21, N.Y.

If you would like to have me autograph your copy, please note this, won't you?

As always, my warm regards,

P.S.
I had, through the years, looked forward to the time when your dear father might read this book and discuss it with me. To you and your mother and your brother I send this belated expression of my sympathy. Hope we can meet some time. H

Dr. A. Hillel Silver

Gehr geehrter Herr Rabbiner!

Von Jahren es war nach der Heimkehr aus dem KZ. haben Sie mir so sehr schön geschrieben. Ihre Adresse ist abhanden, ich nehme aber an,
daß Sie den Brief doch erhalten werden.

Ich gestatte mir heute, meine damals
von Ihnen angebotene Hilfe in Anspruch zu nehmen. Mit der Wieder gutmachung wird es nicht so rasch gehen.
Wenigstens habe ich ja durch.

Nun brauche ich dringend 2000 US Dollar. Ich möchte Ihnen das Geld aber

auf alle Fälle in monatlichen Raten zurück erstatten. Da Sie das Geld seit 18. Februar für mich liegen haben, so finde ich es richtig, daß es, nach dem Sie es mir beschafft haben, ich es Ihnen für Wohltätigkeit wieder zurück sende.

Sie Herr Rabbiner hatten 1937. recht
als Sie sagten, raus aus dem Land.
Aber Sie danken auch meinem
Mann sehr gut.

Es ist furchtbar, die ganze Familie verloren zu haben und einsam zu leben. Dabei noch Not zu haben.

Ich lege das Geld die 2000 Dollars gut an. Bitte senden Sie das Geld sofort ab. Schreiben Sie mir auch wie es Ihnen u. Familie sonst geht.

Leben Sie wohl und verlassen Sie mich nicht. Ich bin nun 60 Jahre alt geworden und als Sie mir
damals 1934. zur Heirat rieten
da sah alles anders aus.

Aber Sie meinten es auch gut.
Leider kam es anders.

Ob Sie noch sich erinnern, als
Sie mir versprachen, ein Häuschen schenken Sie mir.

Bitte geben Sie mir sofort
Antwort und senden Sie das
Geld ab.

Mit lieben Gruss
Fran Elise Marcus.

Dear Rabbi:

Years ago, after the return from K. Z. you wrote such a beautiful letter to me. The address might be wrong but I hope that you will receive the letter.

I would take the liberty today, to ask for the help you offered me then. The retribution coming to me will take some time, though I received some. Now I need $2000 very urgently. I would like to return the money in monthly payments. Since you have been keeping this money for me, for 15 years, I find it only right, since you have gotten it for me, that I return it to you to be used for Charity. Dear Rabbi, in 1937 you were right when you said we should leave this country. However you knew my husband very well. It is horrible to lose your entire family and to be lonesome. I will use the $2000 for a good investment. Please send the money right away.

Also write how you and your family are. Please don't let me down. I am 60 years old and things look very different now than they did in 1934 at my wedding. you meant very well then, everything just turned out differently.

Do you still remember when you promised to make me a gift of a little house?

Please answer immediatly and send the money.

Best regards.

Dear Daniel:

If I am not mistaken, Harold told me that among the historical material in your father's files, is the stenographic record of a meeting of the Jewish Agency Executive - American Section, around the end of April or the beginning of May 1948. I am referring to a meeting at which we discussed a proposal of the U.S. State Department to postpone the proclamation of the Jewish State pending the convening of a round-table conference of Jewish and Arab leaders.

The Minutes of this particular meeting have not been available to me, though I did get from Jerusalem the stenographic Minutes of other meetings of that period, which I turned over to your father and which were returned to me in due course by his secretary. If the Minutes to which I am now referring are actually available, I am most anxious to see them or have a copy.

I may be leaving for Israel early in June and may be able to get other material from the Central Zionist Archives if your staff would pinpoint the data they would like to have.

I am enclosing another copy of my address at the opening session of the Zionist Actions Committee, though I have already sent one to your mother.

"On the Nation's Loss"

A Sermon Delivered By
Rabbi Arthur J. Lelyveld

at

Fairmount Temple

on

Friday, November 29, 1963

The printing and distribution of this sermon is made possible by a Special Fund established by a member of the congregation.

Every sensitive soul has been scarred by the events of the last eight days -- we are somewhat diminished in pride, somewhat less certain. Indeed, tonight we find our uncertainty has been increased and we bear a double portion of sorrow. Some may find a contrast between the two events that are inevitably in the forefront of our thinking tonight: -- the death of our young President cut down by an act of violence; -- and the death of a great Rabbi who has fulfilled his three score and ten, called in the quiet of his home. Yet there is that which unites them. Both the national leader and the leader of our people symbolized in their lives a conception of man, an attitude toward life and a Messianic hope that made them truly one in their separateness. Tonight as we memorialize the one and the other lies yet unburied, we reflect not only upon life's uncertainty but upon the certainties to which they were both dedicated.

We reassure ourselves by a judgment that only a psychopath could have fired the shot that terminated the life of John Fitzgerald Kennedy. Certainly that is true. The response of this last week -- that response which we share as we come here in such great numbers, searching for the strength of community and for that re-building of purpose that can restore the diminished portion of self -- has shown how universally Jack Kennedy was loved. He was loved above partisan judgments; loved for the image of America that he presented; loved for his youth and his vibrancy; loved for the family joy he reflected, for the democratic goals that he served, for his vitality and for his courage in action, for his practical and down-to-earth skills.

His very election was an object lesson in American pluralism: that a Catholic should be chosen President of these United States! Why, but a century had elapsed from the time of the Know-nothings, the riots of the APA's, the anti-Catholic and the anti-Irish prejudices of the 1850's and the 1860's, to the joy of America in John Fitzgerald Kennedy, proud scion of the Irish!

This was far more than a paper image, far more than the handsome young man who fulfilled the dream enshrined in our slick magazines. John F. Kennedy was the acme of competence. He was a competent politician who knew the importance of winning but was willing to accept compromise on detail if never on principles, and who restored through his life and through his writings respect for the venerable and much abused profession of politician.

John F. Kennedy had a mind equal to the complexities of modern government; he was able to absorb and to expound with keen lucidity the details of finance and of military policy and of departmental complications with an articulateness as well as a charm that disarmed his opponents. A Pulitzer-Prize-winning author whose book, "Profiles In Courage", stands as a brilliant exposition of the meaning of political courage, he himself was a model of the courage which he extolled and which he defined in Hemingway's phrase as 'grace under pressure'. How often he displayed that grace and how beautifully in the week just ended his widow stood for the same quality of 'grace under pressure' with a grandeur and a nobility that no one of us will ever forget!

Pick up "Profiles Of Courage" and leaf through it, or read deliberately the biographies he offers of Daniel Webster, Thomas Hart Benton, John Quincy Adams, Sam Houston, Robert Taft -- senators who stood for integrity and whose lives were marked by this virtue of political courage. On the foreleaf of that volume, the young Senator from Massachusetts quoted the words of Edmund Burke, which the great Dublin-born British orator and statesman had used in extolling Charles James Fox for his attack upon the inequities and the tyranny of the East India Company: "He has put to hazard his ease, his security, his interest, his power, even his...popularity ... He is traduced and abused for his supposed motives. He will remember that obloquy is a necessary ingredient in the composition of all true glory..."

John F. Kennedy quoted Edmund Burke but he spoke his own conviction, remembering at the age of thirty-eight that obloquy, abuse and hazard are necessary ingredients of all true glory. He spoke his own convictions, too, when he asked why these Senators whose profiles he drew acted as they did: they did so, he tells us, because each one's need to maintain his own respect for himself was more important to him than his popularity with others; because his desire to win a reputation for integrity and courage was stronger than his desire to maintain his office; because his conscience, his personal standard of ethics, his integrity or morality, was stronger than the pressures of public disapproval; because his faith that his course was the best one and would ultimately be vindicated outweighed his fear of public reprisal.

How grim these words seem in retrospect: that his integrity outweighed his fear of reprisal, his respect for self overcame his recognition of hazard!

So often in the past week we have thought of our earlier martyred Presidents and particularly of Abraham Lincoln, of that Long Train which for fifteen days made the journey from Washington through New York and west to Springfield. There is much more than superficial, external event to link John F. Kennedy with Abraham Lincoln in our thoughts. Like Lincoln, he drew upon the model of Scripture in his writing, though his prose style was unmistakably his own. He spoke and wrote with a simplicity that sprang directly from the Bible not only when he quoted Isaiah, but when he summoned us to our destiny: "Together, let us explore the stars, conquer the deserts, eradicate disease, tap the ocean's depths and encourage the arts and commerce." Or when he called us to "bear the burden of a long, twilight struggle, year in and year out, 'rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation', to struggle against the common enemies of man: tyranny, poverty, disease and war itself."

How significant that among his last words was this re-affirmation of the humane and the civilized against the Neanderthal and the primitive, "In a world full of frustrations and irritations America's leadership must be guided by the lights of learning and of reason."

The contrast is so evident there that this is the stuff of which authentic legends are made, the kind of authentic legends that grew up about Abraham Lincoln "when the barge captain and the flatboat man and the teller of coarse jokes were all forgotten and in the hearts of the people the new legend was weaving."

The legend of Abraham Lincoln is true. The legend of John Fitzgerald Kennedy will be equally authentic and equally true because it enshrines the perennial contrast -- on the one side, beauty, grace, love, vision and reason; on the other side, ugliness, brutality, violence and ignorance.

Out of that contrast flow our national humiliation and shame. "Al tagidu b'Gas -- Tell it not in Gath and publish it not in the streets of Ashkelon!" For, as James Reston said, "This decent country has been made to look uncivilized." Private anger and private sorrow are not enough to redeem the events of the last eight days. What we have witnessed is a crescendo of violence that began with the sniper's bullet that took the life of Medger Evans, grew with the bomb that destroyed the lives of four little children in Birmingham and found its climax in the sniper with a telescopic sight who slew our President, and the misguided primitive who slew the alleged slayer.

Our only hope is to face this crescendo of violence and to face it squarely so that the shock will help us to recover a vision of our own. This is the center of our sorrow and the crux of the challenge. Walter Lippman writes, "The treatment of human beings as things, as the mere instruments of power and ambition is without doubt the consequence of the decay of the belief in man as something more than an animal. The liberties we talk about defending today were established by men who took their conception of man from the great central religious tradition of Western civilization and the liberties we inherit can almost certainly not survive the abandonment of that tradition."

Those are the words of Walter Lippmann who thirty-five years ago sought to find a new foundation for morals believing that that great tradition which he now calls "the central religious tradition of Western civilization" had lost its potency and that modern man had no choice but to begin to build anew. Walter Lippmann has had many experiences in the last thirty-five years, as we all have had many experiences, and he has come a long way from the position he took in 1929. We have all come a long way from our rejection of "the central religious tradition" -- from the certainties of the twenties and the thirties to the doubts and the existential agonies of the nineteen-sixties.

The legend of John Fitzgerald Kennedy, indeed the life of John Fitzgerald Kennedy, offers us a beacon for direction. He stood with every fibre of his being for that great central religious tradition of Western man -- for the Judeo-Christian conception of man as endowed by his Creator with inalienable rights, as filled with potentiality, as entitled to that freedom which will enable him to develop and fulfill his capacities. He lived for that concept of man. He struggled for it. And, on November 22nd, he died for it.

May we, who are the heirs of his struggle, re-establish now before it is too late, that conception of man as the child of God -- re-establish the primacy of reason and learning, the primacy of love and of faith and of brotherhood. Then out of our sorrow, out of our anguish, there may come this measure of good: a nation re-dedicated to the pursuit of democracy and the pursuit of peace.

Dear Dan:

I know there are a great many papers in your father's collections and I would very much like to have copies for the American Jewish Archives.

In the event that we want to make microfilms of some of the papers, would that be permitted?

You know, of course, that we operate under Library of Congress restrictions. This means that nothing can be used or published which would in any way reflect on living people.

I shall be pleased to hear from you at your convenience.

With all good wishes, I am,

I am certain you will bring him great honor. Your capabilities are already known.

My very best good wishes to you.

Dear Dr. Marcus:

In response to your kind letter of 26 June, we are developing here a fine Archives Library of Dad's material -- lectures, correspondence, etc. A professional archivist has been at work for some six months now, and material is slowly being sorted out and arranging itself. There will be the usual library catalogue aids, and qualified researchers will be welcomed.

In this case I'd like to put the shoe on the other foot. You must have materials in the Archives relating to Dad. We would be willing to pay the time of a researcher in sorting these out, and the expense of photostating and/or microfilming these for use here. Could this be arranged?

Dear Gene:

In response to your kind letter of June 23rd, I have gone through Dad's lectures and I found that on one or two occasions he has touched on the art of preaching -- most recently, before the CCAR in 1963. In none of these lectures, however, is the art of preaching the dominant theme.

I know that Dad worked hard on the two or three Ordination sermons which he delivered at the College, and you may find these to be excellent material for your book.

We plan to publish three or four volumes of Dad's lectures and sermons in the near future. These will offer students insight into Dad's methods of preaching. Also, fortunately, we have tapes and records of Dad's speeches from The Temple pulpit over the last decade at least, and so the power of the living voice is not completely stilled.

Hoping that this finds you in good health and that you will have a most pleasant summer, I remain

Rabbi Jacob R. Marcus
American Jewish Archives

Dear Dr. Marcus:

I have before me your note of 7 July. In making my request I had no aim but to draw together here all materials which deal directly with Father. He is, after all, the sole focus of our project. As executor of Dad's literary remains, I cannot permit a blanket copying of these materials. Frankly, our Archives would cease to have any scholarly significance. Furthermore, much of this material is highly personal and reflects on people still alive.

The Archives will always be prepared to permit photostating of specific material upon request. As the master Archivist, you surely understand these limitations. Yet may I repeat my request that you will permit this office to hire someone to run through your materials to see what correspondence touches Dad directly, to make specific application to photostat, and if granted, to complete such a project. I continue to hope that this can be arranged.

On quite other matters, my secretary, Mrs. Maurice Goldstein, and her family will be visiting Cincinnati Tuesday next, the 21st. They are most eager to view the College and the Archives, and I was presumptuous enough to suggest that if they were to introduce themselves they would be made welcome.

Mother continues to display magnificent courage. Our family is well, and as you can see by this letterhead, Lawrence Forman has joined our staff. Hoping this note finds you in the best of health, and with all my good wishes for a pleasant summer, I remain

I can understand your reluctance to part with much of it, though I would hope that it would ultimately make its way to this permanent repository. In the meantime, might I make this suggestion. The Archives would be happy to pay for the microfilming or photocopying of all this material. We have a full time archivist at work, and I would be happy to send her to Detroit to undertake this task.

I trust that our paths will cross in the not-too-distant future. The Archives Room and the major filing will be done before Dad's yahrzeit. Publication of much of his material should start shortly afterward.

Rabbi Daniel Silver

Dear Rabbi Silver,

I am a grandson of Reverend Masliansky. Shortly after my grandfather's death in 1942, a memorial meeting was held for him in the Educational Alliance, which had been his platform for many years. Your late father was the guest speaker. Although I was only thirteen years old, to this very moment I can recall his speech in my mind. He moved me so very deeply that for many years after that, whenever he appeared in New York I would manage to be there to hear him.

In recent years I have been very active in the United Jewish Appeal in two capacities. I organized the first non-professional speakers bureau to train young people to tell the U.J.A. story. I later became the New York City chairman of the young people's division. One of the surprising and depressing parts of the job has been the relative ignorance of young people about Jewish problems and personalities. This can be illustrated when I tell you that a young lady who had come to New York from Seattle was introduced to me by one of our workers. She has a Master Degree in political science and is currently employed by Senator Keating as part of his campaign committee. One would certainly expect a girl of this background to be "aware", yet when I invited her to attend a memorial meeting for Chaim Weitzman, she replied, "Who is Chaim Weitzman?" Many similar comments over the past few years have indicated a general lack of knowledge on the part of so many young people about recent Jewish history: both personalities and events.

You may be wondering at this point about the purpose of this letter. It is my personal feeling that many things can be done to educate and enlighten people about their roots. I believe that you and your family owe it to the public to preserve your father's voice. Many people considered him the greatest orator of our times, yet despite the fact that I have looked about, I have found no recordings of his speeches available. There is one talk made from his study about the nature of Judaism which I obtained by writing to the temple years ago. Awhile back I heard a few fragments of a speech on a record about contemporary Jewish affairs. Hundreds of records of Yiddish and Hebrew folk music have been made, numerous chants by well known cantors have been issued, recordings about Jewish festivals have been released for children, even Yiddish poetry is on records, but the greatest saga in the life of a people has been omitted. Nowhere can one find Silver, Wise, Lipsky, Neuman, or a whole host of other personalities worthy of preservation. Nor have the events they were part of been recorded in the Edward R. Murrow fashion of "I Can Hear It Now". (I am aware of one mediocre recording which leaves out most of the role of American Jewry.)

I am not so naive as to think that such recordings would be commercially successful. However, with all the money spent on abstruse and in some cases unimportant Jewish projects, it seems outrageous that something more constructive along these lines has not yet been done.

A recording of the great orations of your father, which I assume are at least partially available would have several values:

1. It would furnish students of Jewish history with a living record of the past.
2. It would provide an interesting source of material for students of public speaking.
3. It would provide rabbis and rabbinical students with a lesson in organization and delivery which so many are lacking.
4. Finally, it would provide a cherished memento for those who have a sentimental feeling about the past.

I sincerely hope that something will be done along these lines.

Very sincerely,

Marshall Weinberg

July 24, 1964

Dear Mr. Weinberg:

I am most grateful to you for your kind letter of 21 July. My father had great respect for your grandfather and at the beginning of an autobiography which will soon be published, he speaks of the lasting impact of your grandfather's preaching on his life.

In memory of my father, The Temple has established a Memorial Archives and Library. You will be interested to know that we have tapes and records of every one of Dad's pulpit lectures over the past decade, and films and recordings of some other of his major speeches. I hope some day to have these pressed professionally and I found your letter much to the point.

I hope that if you are ever in Cleveland you will pay us a visit; if not, I am sure that our paths will cross in Jewish life. With all good wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Rabbi Dan:

It was pleasant talking to you over the phone regarding a gift to the Temple of a bronze bust of your beloved Dad.

As we both are aware, its value and acceptance can only be measured by the emotional expression and skill of the artist. In this case, it is a rather delicate situation since there are constituents and a committee to contend with.

I thought at first I would try taping the artist's name, but feel now that this is not the proper approach and would also detract from the piece. However, I am sure that you can measure acceptance in your own way.

I have kept this piece in my collection and have only used it, like a number of others, where an occasion presents itself where some good could be done through an exhibition for charitable purposes. If there is an acceptance, I am hoping that some scheme can be resolved where the congregation could participate in some monetary way to raise additional funds dedicated to the Memorial and Archives Building or to the Educational Fund that the late Rabbi Abba Hillel was so interested in.

If you do decide to temporarily withhold the name of the artist, the only other individual that we both know of who has seen the bronze bust is Leo Neumark, whom I am sure can be taken into confidence.

I have had nice acceptance from those persons whose portraits I had done, and I am enclosing herewith photostats of some of their comments which you can return to me after they have served your purpose. Not being a professional artist, that is, by making a living through the skill, I hold publicity about myself with reservation, except for an exhibition. The acceptance and contribution to worthy efforts becomes the reward and satisfaction.

In accordance with your suggestion, I am making arrangements to send the bust and the pedestal to the Temple in your care on Wednesday, September 9, or Thursday, September 10. The pedestal may not be strictly in keeping with what you or the committee may have in mind, but that can be reviewed at a later date.

I want to thank you for giving me this opportunity of being of some service to the Temple.

Dear Danny:

I am very interested in seeing to it that there is a festschrift for Phil Bernstein for his 65th birthday celebration, which would give me only about a year and a few months to work. I can imagine the great amount of organization and labor that is necessary for the completion of such a project.

Knowing of your own involvement recently in such a publication, I wonder if you could help me with the answers to the following questions:

1. Is there any way to get a copy of the budget for the book with which you were involved?
2. How was the financing done?
3. How were the articles solicited? I assume no one was paid for the contributions.
4. To what extent was the congregation involved in this and/or individual contributors?
5. How long did the entire project take from beginning to end? Do you think I could still organize and complete it in the time left?

If there is any other help you can give me, I would be most grateful.

Dear Herb:

Dad's Jubilee Volume cost $15,000 to publish and took a year and a half of time in the editing. The money was raised by voluntary subscription. Articles were solicited from a carefully drawn up list, and no payment was made for contributions. Each author received a copy of the book and as many reprints of his article as he requested, gratis.

If you are undertaking this project, you will find that the bulk of time is spent getting the individual contributors to mail in their articles. To save time, I had each article retyped here and mailed back to the author. This was his last viewing of his handiwork. I did not send him the proofs, but only assured each man that they would be printed exactly as submitted.

The important thing is to assure yourself of worthwhile content. You will find that many dear friends are academically sterile and many institutional heads simply give you a rehash of something which has been overhashed.

Good luck with the project. It's a fine one.

Dear Daniel:

Your very gracious letter of March 1 awaited me at home when I returned from my trip out of town. I want you to know that I am deeply and sincerely appreciative of your very kind thoughts and your good wishes. They mean a great deal to me.

There has been much that the Silver Family and I have had in common. Your father came to Cleveland about the same time I did in mid-1920. Long before we were married, Mrs. Rasmussen and I started attending your father's services in the old Temple on 55th Street. And whenever we tired of listening to outmoded and pedantic theology, we were among the congregation at the new Temple on Sunday mornings.

You perhaps remember that at the dedication of the beautiful YMCA building in Jerusalem, Isreal, Lord Allenby made the dedicatory address and your father read the 12th Chapter of the Hebrews in Hebrew. Fred Ramsey of Cleveland was in charge of the construction. Later on, when M. D. Crackel, one of our pioneer workers with youth, retired and went to Jerusalem to help initiate the program with boys, he was having some difficulty getting a visa. I dropped your father a note and he took care of the matter.

All of Cleveland, as well as all of the world, benefited because of his prophetic voice and his gracious leadership. Now you are carrying on his image in a wonderful way.

Rabbi Daniel Jeremy Silver

All of the foregoing adds up to some of the reasons why I appreciate your kind note. I hope to stay in Cleveland and be useful. Why should I go to Florida when I can live in a community like this? Anyway, I hate Florida.

With all good wishes,

Cordially yours,

E. V. Rasmussen

Dear Rabbi Silver:

Several years ago your late father, Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver, had several discussions with our representatives concerning the publication of the Great Dictionary of the Yiddish Language. As a result of these conversations and exchange of letters with our office here in New York, we received a formal endorsement for the project signed in his hand plus a verbal commitment to prevail upon the Board of Trustees of the Temple to contribute the sum of $1000. towards the publication of the second volume of this monumental dictionary.

I am enclosing for your information a copy of his endorsement. I would be most grateful to you if you could use your good offices with the Temple or other sources in behalf of this important historical venture in the Jewish community in the U. S. A.

The story of the old Yemenite workman who prays daily at Kfar Silver for your father's repose is indeed touching and I am sure he would treasure a letter from you. The director of the community should be able to deliver the message.

Sophisticated Americans Visit Israel

By M. Z. FRANK

Sometimes, when one has met enough Israelis and Americans familiar with Israel or America fed up on the usual propaganda, one gets the impression that the old enthusiasm for Israel has given place to cynicism. In many cases that cynicism is only on the surface, but it is there. You can cut it with a knife.

And yet there is enough to prove that neither the idealism of the pioneers nor the admiration of the tourists has been exhausted.

One day we took a trip with representatives of the Moshavim Organization who had to visit some families and places in the course of business. The trip included a visit to several young pioneers from the Argentine, struggling to set up a new farm, and ended up with a circumcision ceremony at the home of a young but already established Moroccan farmer couple.

THE ARGENTINIANS come from well-to-do homes and are now at the hardest period of their pioneering. The Moroccans, coming from a lower standard of living and by now doing well in Israel, show no strain of adjustment. They were happy. The father and mother are pretty good to look at, they have three older children besides the new born male child. Some of the customs they practice are quaint: the women, at certain stages, let out something like an Indian war-whoop. I don't know whether to drive away the evil spirits or to give vent to their joy.

In 1950, in an immigrant camp I visited with Moshe Davis on Simhat Torah, I first heard that female whooping in an Iraqi makeshift synagogue and took it to be the feminine version of the scenes I used to see in my childhood in White Russia (you can still see them in Williamsburg) when men danced on the streets hugging the scrolls of the Torah. The handsome young cleric with a black beard who skillfully performed the rite and appropriate service had a fine face. His prayers had somewhat different tunes than I have been accustomed to hear, but the words were the same, the spirit was the same: only a slight variation on a similar ceremony in Eastern Europe — and a rather pleasing variation.

ALMOST DIRECTLY from the Moroccan "brith-millah" in a village in Lachish we went to the Mann Auditorium in Tel Aviv to hear Dorati and Franciscatti. What a different world!

But Kfar Silver, which we visited a day later, is not anywhere near the Mann Auditorium or a Tel Aviv sidewalk cafe on Dizengoff Street. Kfar Silver is in Lachish, where the act of Jewish creation still goes on with only slight modifications of the early pioneer days. There is greater emphasis today on scientific methods in agriculture. This time the occasion of our visit was the official opening of a biological library donated by Benjamin Fox of Philadelphia.

IT SEEMS TO ME that one of the constants in the attitude of most American Jews towards Israel is the sometimes conscious and sometimes subconscious notion that somehow Israel is as charmingly backward as the Jews in "Fiddler on the Roof," a sort of an orphanage or Old Folks' Home on the old East Side. When they come to Israel and see some things as modern, other things nearly as modern as in the United States or in Western Europe, they can hardly believe their own eyes.

I believe Mr. Fox when he says he has hardly seen anywhere a well-kept and neat a laboratory as the one that bears his name in Kfar Silver. Mr. Fox has seen laboratories in his native Russia (where he was born and went to high school in large cities), in Brussels (where he studied engineering) and in his own large plants in the USA and abroad. He was tremendously impressed by what he saw in Kfar Silver. He had a lump in his throat when he delivered a brief address to the pupils at a festive luncheon in his honor.

Yet the contents of his address was quite prosaic: the need of modern science in agriculture. Why should the hands of a hard-boiled businessman shake when he speaks of such a prosaic matter as the need for a biology laboratory in an agricultural college?

The answer: it is Israel.

This reminds me of another Philadelphia Zionist, whose name I cannot recall. In September of 1950 we both boarded the same plane in Rome. All the way from Rome to Lydda he criticized Israel — which he was now going to see for the first time in his life. As the plane landed, a couple of youngsters came on and chirped first in Hebrew, then in English: "You are welcome to the State of Israel!"

There was some delay when we got off and had to wait for the examination of the baggage. I tried to make the man feel good by agreeing with him:

"They are not very well organized yet," I said to him.

He did not reply. He did not hear what I said. He struggled with a lump in his throat:

"Nice youngsters," he finally managed.

To come back to Kfar Silver.

There is a beautiful synagogue on the premises, facing the main dining room. We were told it was Dr. Silver himself who insisted that the synagogue and the dining room face each other and that there must be nothing between them to obstruct the view. Kfar Silver was Silver's favorite spot whenever he visited Israel.

On the day before Silver died, an old Yemenite workman came to the director of Kfar Silver and insisted he had dreamt Dr. Silver was dying. He asked to be permitted to pray for him in the synagogue. Ever since then he has been coming to the synagogue daily to pray for Silver's repose. He refuses to accept any money. But he would like to get a letter from Dr. Silver's family and he keeps on asking whether there has been word from Cleveland.

Dear Rabbi Silver,

Today I glow with pride, undimmed, because tomorrow you will be a great inspiration to many already inspired women in B'nei.

My pride stems from the fact that I grew up with your marvelous father as my Rabbi, and that, is one of the proudest things in my life.

I remember clearly how wonderfully he became "Child's play" with his warm smile. And the day I was baptized I was so proud when he kissed my forehead.

Dear Sis,

I was very privileged to be present at your Memorial Service on Sunday 27th November last, held in honour of Abba Hillel Silver. I found the service a very moving experience, which has been made all the more meaningful to me by reading "In The Time of Harvest". (This was presented to me on the same occasion and is greatly treasured).

My purpose for writing to you is two-fold. First to formally record my thanks and feelings. Secondly to request a further small favour. During the service a fragment of Abba Hillel Silver's writings was read. It contained phrases such as the following "I believe in Myself -- divinity & nobility of soul -- and in my fellow man -- in work -- in adventure of soul -- never drinking too greedily from the cup of life".

----- I do not believe in being ordinary ----- one ambition is to rise above ----- to be a polypides ----- to blaze a trail through life. " Unfortunately my memory is not good enough to let me remember the remainder. Could you possibly fill me in on the bits that I've lost.

I hope that you will be able to do this for me, without putting you to too much trouble.

My dear Mr. Shohl,

Permit me to acknowledge receipt of your letter, as well as a copy of the Committee's reply to the proposal of Mr. Liss.

I am in general sympathy with the spirit of the Committee's reply that lays stress upon the fact that what we need today is a strengthening of the Hebrew Union College, rather than the creation of a new institution.

I do not agree with you, however, that the College is fully able to supply all the rabbis needed for the Jewish Ministry. It has not done so in the past. It may have the facilities, but it may fail to attract the students.

I furthermore regard your statement, that "Mr. Liss's trip through the West, if successful, is apt to be fraught with danger for our own institution", as factless and groundless. Had the officers of the College and the Union been as anxious to welcome the co-operation and the counsel of Mr. Liss, and of others, as they are now anxious to thwart his project, I feel quite sure that the situation which now confronts you would never have arisen. No exclusive movement can hope to remain monopolistic for very long.

With kindest regards, I beg to remain

I am looking for information and leads that will add further information to what I already have.

I would very much like to do this paper on an aspect of your late father's varied and busy life, but unless I can get sources of information I will have to discard the project until I finish my Ph.d. work. If there are any other topics that you could suggest that have enough information at hand, I would be in your debt.
