Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver,
The Temple,
East 105th St. at Ansel Rd.,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Dear Sir:

IN RE: THE ATLAS SAVINGS & LOAN CO.
VS. ETHEL M. SHEETS, ET AL.

We wish to acknowledge, on behalf of The Atlas Savings and Loan Company, whom we represent, your letter of April 23rd, in which you enclosed a letter that you had received from Miss Ethel M. Sheets.

The letter which you received and forwarded to The Atlas Savings and Loan Company came into this office last Saturday. Miss Sheets came into this office the same morning, and upon seeing her letter, addressed to you, on the desk, she took it and tore it up. The writer, therefore, has little or no information regarding the contents of that letter except what he has been told.

In our opinion there has been nothing irregular about this real estate transaction. We have in our possession a mortgage note dated January 9, 1928, signed by William L. Hutchinson, Enola Hutchinson and Ethel M. Sheets, for $16,000.00. We also have in our file a mortgage covering the premises in question, signed by William L. Hutchinson and Enola Hutchinson. The Guarantee Title and Trust Company's statement of title discloses that the mortgage from William L. and Enola Hutchinson to The Atlas Savings and Loan Company was filed for record on January 28, 1928, at 9:19 A. M. It also shows a mortgage from Ethel M. Sheets to Frank A. O'Neil, filed for record on January 28, 1928, at 9:21 A. M.

From information that we have, it seems that Mr. and Mrs. Hutchinson purchased this property and gave a mortgage on it to The Atlas Savings and Loan Company, and then sold the property to Ethel M. Sheets, who, in turn, gave a mortgage on the property to Frank A. O'Neil. Miss Sheets' attorney has informed us that the deed from Mr. and Mrs. Hutchinson to Miss Sheets contained a clause, whereby Miss Sheets assumed and agreed to pay the first mortgage to The Atlas Savings and Loan Company in the sum of $16,000.00. The payments due on the mortgage were not made, and The Atlas Savings and Loan Company endeavored to get the premises occupied and collect the rents, and the rents collected were applied toward the payment of the loan and the upkeep of the property.

At the time we filed the petition, there was due The Atlas Savings and Loan Company on the mortgage the sum of $15,997.87, together with interest at 8% from August 8, 1928. Suit was filed, in which we asked for a judgment of $17,418.57, together with interest at 8% from September 8, 1929. Miss Sheets, in this action, filed an answer to the petition of the plaintiff, in which she admitted executing the note, and set up a claim to the effect that the plaintiff had collected rents, and that there was not due The Atlas Savings and Loan Company the sum prayed for in its petition. The matter came on for hearing about a week or ten days ago before Judge Kennedy, and after duly exhibiting to Miss Sheets' attorney all of our records and information, it was apparent that she had no defense, and the court, therefore, ordered a decree for the plaintiff and cross-petitioners.

Miss Sheets immediately after that called The Atlas Savings and Loan Company threatening to have the matter investigated by the state, and it seems that she has written numerous letters to various individuals claiming that The Atlas Savings and Loan Company has dealt unfairly with her. We regret exceedingly that she has taken this matter up with you, and if there is anything further that you would like to know about it, we would be glad to talk with you at any time. The Guarantee Title and Trust Company has prepared for us a final judicial sales certificate, and within the next few days we are going to submit to the court the journal entry, and just as soon as a decree is signed the property will be advertised for sale by the sheriff.

Very truly yours,

CANNON, SPIETH, TAGGART, SPRING & ANNAT,

My very dear Rabbi Silver: -

I listened very attentively last Sunday to your sermon on "Is the Pulpit Free?" and you expressed a thought that the only compensation the minister has is that of giving spiritual guidance. I feel very much in need of it for I realize that one cannot go through the "storms of life" without a something to cling to.

Science and the scientific attitude has failed me - in fact it has distorted and disappointed my very urge for belief. Please do send me a list of books on the subject of Religion and how to gain that faith that I am aching for to cling to.

With kindest thoughts of you and your dear ones

The enclosed letter was drafted some months ago but laid aside for further consideration. As time went on the impulse to send the letter was lessened by the feeling that the occasion was history, and warranted no reviving. However, so great was the impression made by the marvelous address of Dr. Silver's, that I have since thought of it often, and finally concluded that I should let you know how at least a 'stranger within your gates' was impressed by what he had heard.

The letter is but an appreciation of the good received at that time, and of the pleasure which has continued to the present day.

My dear Dr. Siegel:-

Please pardon the long delay in answering your letter of April 17th. I have been away from the city so much of the time that my correspondence has lagged.

I have heard nothing about the proposed Department of Semitic Languages and Literature at Western Reserve University. I have spoken to some of the men of the University and they have heard nothing about it. Should such a department come into existence I shall be very happy to keep you in mind and write to you.

Within the last year or so there has been a great deal of talk about a Department of Semitic Languages and Literature at Western Reserve, largely due to a certain ambitious Rabbi who thought that he would fit into the picture if such a department would be created. His wish was father to his thought. This gentleman is now a denizen of your fair city.

My dear Joe:-

I hope that you will pardon the long delay in answering your letter about Dr. Don Tullie.

I understand that Dr. Tullie is already in Cleveland so that any information that I can give him I shall, in all probability, do so in person.

I think that Dr. Tullie has made a wise choice in coming to the Federated Churches of Cleveland. It is a very important organization in the life of our community.

I hope that I may have the pleasure of seeing you at the Rabbinic Conference.

My two youngsters are doing splendidly.

With kindest regards and best wishes, I am

Very sincerely yours,

Dear Silver:

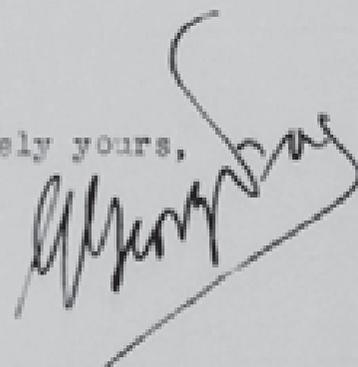

The Rabbinical Association of Chicago has appointed a Committee of which I am Chairman to work out some means of helping the wandering rabbis who come to us for alms from across the water. It has become quite a problem in Chicago, and I suppose you have your ^{tsore's} tsore's in Cleveland.

Will you be kind enough to give us any suggestions you might have with regard to these rabbinical unfortunates who come here to collect funds and then go back. I know that my Committee will be glad to avail itself of any data you may give me.

I am also working with the thought in view that we might be able to co-ordinate this work in several larger cities.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely yours,

WHY I AM LEAVING THE PROFESSIONAL MINISTRY

This is the last day of my official incumbency as co-rabbi of Temple Israel. Three months ago I tendered my resignation to the Board of Trustees. Tomorrow, March first, it is to take effect.

In the Hebrew Bible, the patriarch Abraham was above all else the arch-adventurer. Discontent was ever at his vitals, prodding him from place to place. In the 12th Chapter of Genesis, where he first embarges, God is represented as saying unto him, "Get thee out of thy land, out of thy birthplace, and the house of thy fathers, and go to a land I shall show thee and be a blessing." And Abraham went. There is the prototype of Israel; ready always for a new spiritual enterprise, quailing at no challenge. I who bear his name am about to depart from my land and birthplace and the house of my fathers; for my forebears in every generation have given a Rabbi to Israel, and from my earliest years I have been prepared for that rank. What cause inspires me? What inner God commands? Why am I leaving the Professional Ministry?

When I first announced my intention to the Board, I thought that a constantly increasing interest in vocal music primarily impelled me. But motives are never pure, and rarely simple. Their parenthood is not easy to discover. Recent months have proven to me that beneath the surface of my mind sunk stratum upon stratum of accumulated reflection about the function and value of the ministry and organized religion. Day after day I have dug into these layers, until I have reached the veriest bottom.

I am taking the liberty, this evening, to tell you what I have found, not because I have stumbled across a priceless treasure within myself, nor because my experience has been rare. I stand here before you as a symbol of the universal experience of young men and women everywhere. Hundreds of you in this place have traversed, step by step, the road my feet have trodden. Because my five years in the ministry are a cross-section of the spiritual travail of modern youth, because I dare to elect myself their spokesman, because a minister is never more nobly the servant of his people than when he voices their own inescapable experience of life upon this pigmy planet, I must relate why I am giving up the ministry.

My personal relations with my colleagues, Dr. Farris, and the lay officers of the congregation, especially the President, have been marked by the utmost cordiality. They have shown a helpfulness and an indulgence that are unforgettable. Every thing possible has been done to make my rabbinate pleasant and comfortable. And I have been vouchsafed some friendships which, I hope, will continue throughout years to come.

It is not about any specific persons, or congregation, therefore, that I have been stripped of my illusions. In fact, what I shall say does not even apply exclusively to Judaism. It refers to organized Religion in all its manifestations.

The salient fact about the church today is its complete loss of authority. Thirteen years ago I entered, a mere child, upon my training for the ministry at Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati. That same year, America entered the World War. I belong, therefore to what may be termed the War Generation, for I spent the most sensitive period of my life under its impact. Whatever cataclysmic changes that awful conflict brought about registered themselves on my soul, as surely as swollen streams furrow the hillside. Since its advent, no institution has been the same, and none has suffered more than the organized church.

Before the War, the power of religion was something to be reckoned with. It could dictate conduct by the threat of hell-fire; it was regarded as the supreme source of social idealism; it was the ally of the home in constructing a basis for conventional behavior. Preachers moulded opinion from the pulpit and shaped lives in the study. People gathered about the Synagogue, Cathedral and Church for every purpose; it was their partner in joy and sorrow, it offered them the solitude of private prayer and contact with their fellowmen.

What now? Huge, expensive buildings, dedicated to God - and empty of man; architectural perfection, physical richness but mausoleums of a vitality that is gone. The church at this hour is like the mummy of Tut-an-Khamen - loaded with material glory but bereft of life. Millions of years ago our earth was the dwelling-place of the dinosaurs; that gigantic reptile vanished because it had all body and no brain. Organized religion seems to be drifting to the same destiny, armed with brick and mortar and silver and gold and vestments, but stripped of a vital spark.

Walk with me down New York's Broadway or the main street of Bellaire, Ohio, where I was born. Where are folks going? To prayer-meeting or religious service? Ask for the most popular place in town. Will it be the church? Find out who is listened to about questions of vital importance. The minister?

I can detect the answer in your eyes. Those scurrying minds are pointed for the theatre and the movies and the bridge-party; except for holidays and time of mourning, they have forgotten where the church is; the men from whom they ask counsel are scientists, and bankers and business men and engineers and psychiatrists. Sigmund Freud influences more lives than all the saints in heaven. The education of our children is more affected by moving picture magnates than ministers. Amos 'n Andy reach more hearts than the most brilliant preacher in the country. The lowliest chemist in his laboratory wields more sway over the affairs of men than the high priest on his altar groping for a divine revelation. A seat on the stock exchange is worth more to the vast majority of people than a portion of Paradise. The recent collapse in security values gave rise to more heart-felt prayer than the liturgy. Clara Bow has more to do with the morals of young women than Bishop Manning.

I would compare organized religion to a deserted lighthouse. In years gone by that guiding light shown out into the darkness and led many weary mariners to port. The shaft of golden rays still pierces the mist, but there is none to notice. For the waters which once billowed about the craggy peak have receded and the tides of human energy beat on other shores.

Beyond doubt this decay in the importance of organized religion is in large part an inevitable effect of the progress in science. This is an age of the technician. We pin our hopes, perhaps unjustifiably, on scientific research as the fountain-head of salvation. Our roster of sages is filled with such men as Einstein and Koch and Michelson, Lindbergh is our Crusader. No contemporary fact more aptly embodies this tendency than the difference between Woodrow Wilson, our War President, and Herbert Hoover, the man of the hour. Wilson was religious-minded, poetic, introverted. Hoover is a trafficker in things, an efficiency expert, thoroughly saturated with the psychology of business. Our hero is not the man of vision, but the man of action.

And the concentration of men into cities is another potent factor. Urban dwellers throughout history have been skeptical about the comforts of religion. From Jewish prophets to country parsons, champions of traditional doctrines have fulminated against the wicked city-chaps. Perhaps those who live in kinship with the soil feel more dependent on Deity, whereas inhabitants of cities rely on themselves. And we New Yorkers don't have the solitariness of the field and desert about us to arouse reflection on the brooding mystery of the Universe. The tiller of a tiny farm up-state feels alone and helpless in a raging snow-storm and may pray for deliverance; the occupant of a Broadway apartment hotel calls up his friends, arranges a bridge party, and laughs at the weather.

But much of the fault can be traced to the conservatism of religious leaders themselves. Religion has often been paralyzed by its own protagonists. There isn't a minister in this country who has not been advised, tactfully or otherwise, to "stick to religious subjects." And what do prominent laymen on the Boards of respectable congregations mean by "religious subjects?" As a rule, one that bears no relationship to politics, economics, or sex. In other words, the three pivotal hungers of mankind, the hunger for society, the hunger for food and the hunger for love, are not to be the content or the text of a minister's preaching. Our actual, touchable world seethes and rocks with these vital issues. Governments are chosen, corrupted and overthrown by political problems; entire classes are plunged into poverty by economic cruelties; life after life is blasted by sexual maladjustment. And yet the minister, Ambassador of God, servant of man, vehicle of wisdom, must hold his tongue. Why? Because, forsooth, these are delicate, controversial matters.

As soon as a question is asked, it becomes by its very nature controversial, and it is delicate in proportion to its importance. If organized religion is to be more than a fashionable voice in the wilderness, evoking naught but its own echo, it must grapple fearlessly and honestly with every problem that confronts mankind!

When the political policy of our nation is at stake in an election, the pulpit is the forum for discussion of the moral principles involved; when thousands of men and women are cruising our streets without a job, that is where the wrong is to be blazoned upon the very skies; when our youth is being tormented by the relaxation of taboos, it is the minister who should enlighten them. And when the next war casts its rain of horrors upon the earth, the church of God must be inviolate to hatred, its ministers must oppose the sanctity of human life against the idolatry of a shallow patriotism, and its law of love must rise undismayed in the reeking midst of madness. Then our youth will not lose faith in religion.

This is not to say that the organized church has been completely isolated from events. A record of achievement does exist, but it is pathetically slender. Reformed Judaism has, through its conference of Rabbis, ratified the demands of social idealism. The Catholic clergy has at times cooperated to secure a larger modicum of industrial righteousness and sends papal encyclicals forth against immorality. Whereas Protestantism's claim to triumph rests upon prohibition, a claim which is being rather seriously disputed by both bootleggers and Congressmen.

Such accomplishments are negligible in the face of the clamorous need for social amelioration. With foundations and standards crumbling, the church must act with resolution, throwing itself into the battle. We cannot leave the fulfillment of human promise to God - we must work with Him.

We must have done with the mere verbal formulation of ideals; ideals are opiates, until every endeavor is made to embody them in social practice. If I were asked to choose a prayer for utterance by every minister, my memory would turn to a poem by John Drinkwater:

We know the paths wherein our feet should press,
Across our hearts are written Thy decrees,
Yet now, O Lord, be merciful to bless
With more than these.

Grant us the will to fashion as we feel,
Grant us the strength to labor as we know,
Grant us the purpose, ribbed and edged with steel,
To strike the blow.

Knowledge we ask not - knowledge Thou hast lent,
But, Lord, the will - there lies our bitter need,
Give us to build above the deep intent
The deed, the deed.

Yet, were that prayer to incarnadine the soul of every religionist with its flaming zeal, the church as at present constituted would be incapacitated by still another disease - that of over-organization. The word "organize" is the key to our whole American scene. We somehow can't believe a thing exists until it is combined with other things into a corporation. Every sphere of our life is subject sooner or later to that mania. When I was very young organizers were the peculiar property of labor unions. Now they are the foundation-stone of our structure.

Let us grant that in our complex age business and politics and education must be welded into order on a large scale, that steel corporations, bank mergers, the Republican Party and Columbia University are the inescapable and precious products of our modern social development. It is not our concern to scrutinize organization as such. But when we look at religion the conclusion is unavoidable that outer organization is stifling the indwelling spirit. It has been true in the past, it is more true today that when an ideal is organized into a cult or creed or church, it is dead. The moment a consuming conviction about God or Fate congeals into material form, it perishes. This has been the end of every great religious movement. The human, loving and gentle soul of Jesus was crushed by the ponderous weight of medieval Catholicism; the pity and serenity of Buddha degenerated into the prayer-wheels of a noisy Buddhist temple; the ringing challenge of the Jewish prophets to let justice flow as a mighty stream evaporated into mystic computations about the coming of the Messiah. There is no religious orthodoxy extant that did not begin as a rebellious heresy. As soon as the heresy was accepted, it ceased to grow. Prosperity has killed more religious ideals than persecution. (Soviets - Christian Endeavor.)

There are many reasons for this, such as loss of spontaneity and individualism in the service (since everybody must use the same prayer-book), the gradual domination of the church by the least cultured masses and many others. I am primarily interested in one peculiarly modern evil of organization; namely, the inclination to regard religion as a commercial investment rather than a spiritual adventure. The subtle process is obvious. High edifices, large memberships, complex machinery must be matched by corresponding budgets. Money must be gathered for multifarious activities. The construction of an imposing house of worship by one congregation often goads others into extravagance and has led to bankruptcy. Frequently there arises among units of the same denomination a spirit of competition more native to department stores than to churches. We have often heard in connection with appraisals of American culture, of the religion of business; an equally graphic phrase would be the business of religion.

The effect of such a mercantile atmosphere upon the ministry is appalling. During the past decade, surely in large cities, the minister has been forced to renounce his mission as a teacher of religion in order to become a salesman, and the refined technique of spiritual ministrations has been coarsened into business administration. He is made to fear a loss in membership more than the wrath of God. Instead of a poet, a dreamer, a transcendent mystic, which every minister must in essence be, he distorts himself into a seeker after popularity, a clerk of pew-rentals, a "good-fellow". The deity of the counting-house and market place has mastered him. Just as other men sell clothes or automobiles or stocks, so does he dispense religion - for a price. In other words, his is no longer a priesthood - it is a profession.

You may have noted that the subject of my address is "Why I am Leaving the Professional Ministry." That adjective is freighted. I am drawing a keen distinction between the minister and the professional minister. That fact is that in a fundamental sense a man can neither enter the ministry nor withdraw from it. He is or he is not. A certificate of ordination cannot create a minister--a man consecrates himself. Genuine spiritual leadership is not based upon the possession of a title or a degree or a position. Three qualities alone can bestow it, and they are knowledge, character and understanding. When a man has these, he is qualified to answer the religious needs of his fellows. The humblest laborer can be more truly a minister to men than the bishop upon his dais. An actor whose lips have been touched by the divine flame can exalt men to loftier summits than the preacher who, to win success, "gives the people what they want." The robe of priesthood is hanging in the closet of everyone who yearns to wear it. It is not the monopoly of professional holy men, but a possibility in every human being under the sun.

Years ago, when my revered friend and colleague Doctor Harris, embarked upon his ministry, conditions were different. Congregations were smaller, personal contact easier and organization not so overpowering. Today, to be a professional minister is a contradiction. If a man has knowledge, character and understanding, all the riches of the Orient could not purchase him, he is incommensurable in material terms. When these are lacking, a farthing is an exorbitant price for his services.

Once a man is compensated for being religious, his influence has terminated. Young people are suspicious of one who lives on his faith, rather than by it. They suspect his independence, his integrity, his freedom from meaner motives. They are right. Religion cannot be sold for profit; it must be bought with suffering, then given gladly and freely to all who thirst for it.

That is why I emphasize the word "professional" in the title of my address. If I have belonged to the ministry as here defined, it is woven into the texture of my inmost being, and no time or circumstance can rob me of it. Whatever of knowledge, character and understanding I have gathered through the years, whether little or much, I shall take with me into the unknown future. They will not be worn on my sleeve for all to see. The sanctity of the pulpit will no longer be their aura. Perhaps the world of my tomorrow will not nourish them as did the world of my yesterday. Yet if I have a message for mankind, nothing on earth can ultimately prevent me from proclaiming it. And as a layman, walking the common earth, I will have much more intimate effective influence on young men and women seeking counsel, than as a preacher enshrouded in the halo of self-righteousness.

Let my resignation be misconstrued as a repudiation of religious faith, perhaps an outline of my attitude is in order.

First, just what do we mean by faith? Formally speaking, faith is an unmodified acceptance of certain dogmas, entailing the complete subjection of one's own opinion. Such faith is unworthy of a modern intelligence and I trust I shall never be driven to it. There is ⁹more profound type of religious faith, however. It is not explicit in a creed, it is implicit in the deed. What men actually do with their lives is a more accurate testimony of faith than what men profess with their lips. Faith is not absolute belief in spite of reason; faith is sincere living in spite of consequences. Dogma is a trivial conscious attempt to define God; life is a vast unconscious attempt to experience Him.

I confess that I could not subscribe wholly to any description of God that I have yet encountered. God has not unfolded himself to me in any theology; no book or school has placed me on the step to His throne. My search for an intellectually satisfying concept of the Deity will cease only when I am laid to rest; then all things will be revealed unto me.

But does my refusal to cabin my mind within a narrow creed mean that I am Godless? Because I can't verbalize Him, is He destroyed for me? Mystery God is, and indefinable by man. Yet there are other ways to His presence. Some leap to Him on the wings of mystic communion and fuse themselves in one burning moment forever. Others kiss the hem of His garment in the ritual of church worship. Some exult His splendor in the loveliness of nature. Others wrestle with Him in the dark cell of a monastery.

I see Him in the daily, humdrum lives of men and women. To me God is the totality of all the decent human relationships in the world. A child gives a coin to a beggar; someone silences a nasty rumor; they are bits of God. They can no more exist without us than we without Him. He is a vain abstraction until we clothe Him with meaning just as we are only animated dust until He inspires us with an end beyond ourselves.

That God is my strength and fortress. - Friends have warned me in such words as these: "How will you make a living? You are discarding your economic security." My friends, of all the fears that strip man of his fortitude, none is more deadly than this fear of economic uncertainty. We have become a nation of neurotics obsessed by the dread of being poor. Suppose struggle and hardship do await me. I know them well, and am not afraid. The warm air of animal comfort is suffocating to the soul. Difficulties make us more than human. Great achievement of the spirit is never cultivated in a hot-house; it is nurtured on the cold winds of ceaseless battle. I scorn the assurance that unflinching material comfort would give; the price is fatty degeneration of the moral fibre. There, in the seething world of endless strife with evil, the invincible soul of man must be forged. There my life henceforth will be spent, not because I have lost faith in God, but because I have had a faith in the universe, in life, in man. Whatever betides, that faith will be, I pray, my support; it will speak to me as God spoke to Israel through the prophet Isaiah:

"When thou passest through the waters, I shall be with thee. And through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee. When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; Neither shall the flame kindle upon thee."

As to happiness, my friends, what is its secret? Man has searched after it down all the labyrinthine ways of his own mind, guided only by the thread of his desire. Countless are its protean shapes. May I barely suggest my own? Happiness is the fulfillment of one's faculties on their highest plane. In other words, when the life of man is the outward expression of an inward grace, when what is within him of thought and feeling achieves its own perfection, happiness has come. Nothing external to ourselves can fashion it, neither material wealth nor glory. It is the fruit of inner self-perfection. If a man nourishes a dream of artistic triumph, let him seek it; if in his heart a song is begging to be sung, let him sing it. Perhaps men will dub him impractical. But he is wiser than they. For he has sacrificed material riches, which time can diminish and thieves can steal and rust can corrode, for treasures of the spirit, which link him up for all eternity with the spirit of mankind in every age and clime. The central duty of our lives is to think clearly, to feel nobly, to live simply - to dredge out what is profoundest and best within us, and yield it up gladly to the world.

The final decision was painful indeed. Intimate bonds have to be strained; tried contacts endangered. I feel suspended between two worlds--as one recedes into the depths of tender memory, the other edges slowly over the horizon. There it is, hovering nearer. I know not what it has in store for me of suffering or surprise, of joy or disillusion. But this I do know, that when I meet it at last, the friendliness and warmth of the world I am leaving will gird me with strength.

You folks of Temple Israel have been kind to me beyond my deserving. When I came to you, I had not a single acquaintance in your ranks, and the number of friends in the city could be counted on one hand. This evening, greeted here by so many as I bid farewell, I begin to hope that the time spent in your service has not been altogether in vain. I look about and see many smiles of recognition, many eyes from which understanding reaches out to me. Here on the platform is your President, with whom I have enjoyed the closest relations of mutual regard. We have talked about many things, he and I, of fate and death and the dilemma of man on earth. Some of his words were plumbed with wisdom and have sunk to the very bottom of my mind. The hospitality of his home has cheered many lonely and weary hours. And something collapses within me when I realize that few moments will sever my official association with Dr. Harris. As a Rabbi, I have admired his scholarship, respected his honesty, and envied him his tenacity of purpose. As a man I have begun to feel for him a sentiment deeper than friendship. Were the word not cheapened by usage, I would say that I have begun to love him.

Not with lightness of heart do I bid you good-bye. Every spiritual adventure exacts its price, and this one is heavy indeed. But I am in the hands of some power greater than my affection for you, greater than my humanity, greater than my own will. That undeniable destiny points the way, and I must follow. I can do naught else.

Because I know that Religion, as at present organized, is not playing an important part in the vital affairs of mankind and the only reason for my remaining a minister would be the earning of a livelihood. Because to use the ministry for professional purposes is little more than parasitism, so, therefore, I am driven out of it by a system over which neither you nor I have any control. Because I have unbounded faith in God and man and am undaunted by economic uncertainty. Because to me the road to happiness is the expression of one's purest crystal-clear self -- I am leaving the professional ministry.

At the end of the first sermon I delivered on this pulpit, I quoted from the poem "Ulysses" by Tennyson. It is fitting beyond measure that this my last sermon should end in like manner. You remember in that stirring poem how Ulysses and his men after they had found their haven were enjoying the comforts of a tropical island. But Ulysses is discontented; ease is not in his nature. Finally he rouses them from their bovine somnolence, bids himself for a new journey and more perilous quest, and shouts to them --

"Come, my friends, 'tis not too late to win a better world,
Push off, and sitting yet in order suite the sounding furrows.
For my purpose holds to soil beyond the sunset
And the path of all the western stars, until I die.

It may be the Gulf's will wash us down,
It may be we shall reach the happy isles,
And see the great Achilles, whom we knew.
Though much is taken, much abides
And tho' we are not now that strength
Which in old days moved earth and heaven,
That which we are, we are--
One equal temper of heroic hearts
Made weak by time and fate but strong in will
To seek, to strive, to find,--and not to yield."

My dear Mr. Sowers:-

Permit me to thank you for your kind letter of May 16th.

Much as I value the privilege of being a member of the Rotary Club, I feel that my numerous engagements out of the city and in the city during the most of the year make it impossible for me to attend, with any regularity, to the meetings of the Rotary Club.
I realize fully that you have definite rules with reference to attendance requirements. I regret more than I can say that I find it impossible to comply with these requirements and I am therefore compelled to submit my resignation.

Dear Sir:

We are in receipt of your letter of the 16th stating your desire to enter this school but that you lack credit in Organic Chemistry.

For this reason we shall be unable to consider your application as our class is practically filled and we have a large number of applicants from which to select for the few remaining vacancies. We would not be justified in holding a place for you in order that you might make up this requirement in summer school.

The summer Camp Hakoah for boys is under the direction and supervision of men well and favorably known to me, particularly its responsible head, Mr. Max Ozer.

The Camp offers a fine recreational program of athletics and supervised games and pastimes for the boys who are members of it.

Camp Hakoah also tries to introduce a spiritual note in its program through Sabbath services and addressed by Rabbis and teachers.

I have no hesitancy in giving my endorsement to this Camp.

Herman Bernstein is another Landsleuter who has made himself famous. He was born in Neustadt, a few miles from Taurrogen.

I have heard of you since 1924, when LaFollette ran for President, and you were spoken of as one of the silver-tongued orators.

My dear Morris:-

I have long wanted to write to you about your new book "Seed of Abraham" but I have been so busy here with our eightieth anniversary celebration and Confirmation that I frankly have not had a chance until the last few days to read it. As it is, I have not finished it, but what I have read is utterly delightful and exceedingly well written. You have put a great deal of love and warmth into some of the chapters of your book.

You have rendered a real service, by presenting to the public the story of some of the great spirits of our race in an attractive, sympathetic, and at the same time authentic manner. Your book ought to have a wide sale. I am presenting copies of it as prizes to the young men and women of my high school.

My dear Claudia:-

Please pardon the very long delay in answering your letter. In the mass of work entailed by our eightieth anniversary, which takes place this week-end and Confirmation services, your letter was simply overlooked.

I wish I could give you the information which you require about Russia. I know practically nothing about school conditions there. Living conditions in the larger cities are not bad. At least they were not bad when I was there two years ago. There have been many Americans who have gone to Russia for commercial reasons, some to stay there a long time. There has not been much serious complaint about living conditions there for foreigners so that living conditions can not be very bad.

Virginia and the children are fine. I hope that you may see them soon. If Daniel were just a little older we would not hesitate bringing him down to Wheeling for a few days.

I am happy to hear of Marc's fine progress and advancement. It is what I would expect from Marc.

I hope that you are feeling better and that you are able to dispense with your crutches. Atlantic City should do you a great deal of good. Please convey my best wishes to Leo.

Report of A. L. Saltzstein

President, Congregation Emanu-El B'ne Jeshurun, Milwaukee,
At the Annual Meeting, May 13, 1930

Ladies and Gentlemen:

Before rendering my message, I will ask you to rise and pay silent tribute to our cherished members who have departed from this life during the past year, to whose bereaved families we express our deep sympathy: F. E. Abeles, Ben Abrams, Joseph Benesch, George Bernhart, Theodore F. Cohen, Edward Fresell, M. Goldman, Mrs. Isaac Goldsmith, Max Greenblatt, Sidney F. Guttenstein, S. Isaac, Charles Newbauer, Hugo Tewcles, Edwin Teweles, Walter Weiner.

Synagogue and the Home

I will not burden you by repeating figures. You have received, and I hope read, the report of our secretary, treasurer and finance committee, which speaks for itself.

From the very outset, I wish to impress upon you most strongly that the congregation is inseparably bound up with the home. One cannot rise higher than the other. You cannot expect a live Judaism in the synagogue unless you have a live Judaism in the home. It is for that reason, particularly, that I am glad to note that you have come together here tonight in the form of a family circle to consider the problems which face us today. I want to discuss the synagogue with you frankly and openly. I believe this to be my duty, as president of this congregation, as the lay spokesman for over 750 families, who have entrusted in my hands the executive duties of leadership. We should honestly admit our failures as well as take credit for achievements.

Appreciation

I voice the thanks of our entire membership to our Sisterhood who, at every opportunity, are part and parcel of our congregational activities; to our adult choir who have given our members so much joy; to our Junior congregation which is doing excellent work; to the Council of Jewish Women; to our efficient corps of religious school teachers; to the members of our Board and our committees who have so earnestly assisted me in the discharge of my duties, and, last—but not least, to our rabbis who are always ready to give me their full co-operation.

Anniversary Celebration

I am glad to recall the happy event of December 15 of last year—the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the ministry of our Rabbi, Samuel Hirschberg. You will agree with me that the affair, which was attended by 500 of our members, was the most enjoyable of any ever given by our congregation.

Our Religious School

One of the most important functions of the congregation is the training of the children to a proper understanding of Judaism, so that they, in turn, may carry on the faith and impart its lessons to their children.

Our Religious School, I am proud to say, is now our most successful activity. We have the largest enrollment and best attended school in our history. You have heard of its work from the reports by our rabbis and Mr. Harry V. Meissner, chairman of our Religious School Committee.

If the fathers and mothers of our children exhibited but a fraction of interest in the activities of the synagogue as is represented by the work of our Religious School, I would have no reason to elaborate this report, and could close with a few words of praise for everybody, and express the hope that we continue to grow from strength to strength! But, unfortunately, our big problem begins at this very point.

I discussed this with you in my report at the annual meeting in 1928, but I say, with much regret, that the remedies then suggested have done nothing to solve our problem. We have reached a critical stage and will have to adopt radical measures to bring about the desired results. I refer to the problem of indifference of our men and women to the religious work of the synagogue—an indifference which is reflected in our lack of attendance at religious services. Unless we adopt remedial measures, all the fine work of our Religious School will be lost. Unless the child sees his parent take his religion as seriously as he is taught to view it in the Religious School, he will simply follow the example of indifference of his parents. It may be possible, by some miracle, to have children grow up as religious adults without parental example, but it is contrary to all the experience of child training. If the parent does not go to services in the synagogue, the child certainly will not go. If we insist that the child attend services, while we stay at home, he will simply lose respect for our sincerity and appraise us justly as "religious hypocrites," and I do not believe anybody will disagree with me on this point.

Back to the Synagogue

The question, naturally, presents itself—How are we going to bring a large number of our members back to the synagogue? We cannot bring them back by merely condemning their indifference and dejection of duty. We have done that; our rabbis have done that, and our great lay leaders and our congregational conventions have done that. Despite it all, our religious services are not well attended. We are then faced with this situation: Since we cannot change the attitude of the people toward the synagogue as it is constituted today, perhaps we should fit the synagogue to the people.

More Vital Judaism

The name—"Reform Judaism"—is coined to indicate a course chosen by those who felt that they could not, in this modern age, adhere to all of the hard and fast rules of Orthodoxy. The first breach of any rule or law is the hardest. Subsequent transgressions follow with greater ease and less concern. The differences between Orthodoxy, Conservatism and Reform, or one's own individual ideas and ideals of religion, are merely matters of degree.

To my way of thinking, however, we have gone to extremes in our reform. Reform Judaism has been woefully bereft of emotional appeal. The rabbinical orators, scholars, and philosophers all have tried to attract crowds. Some of them appeal to our intellect but still leave our emotions unmoved. Such religious instincts as we have are permitted to slumber.

Fundamentally, all religion is an appeal to emotion. Those things in religion which increase the emotional appeal, build it up and make it strong. Those which minimize this emotional appeal, tend to undermine it. It is true that in our attempt to rationalize religion; to analyze it in a sort of scientific manner, to appeal to our logic, we have lost the appeal to the emotion. We have over-emphasized the rational element. In so doing, we have forgotten one of the fundamental objects of religion . . . the stimulation of our sentimental feelings! We have forgotten that there actually does not have to be an appeal to the mind for everything we do; that it is possible even for men, without the power of reasoning, to experience, nevertheless, a good, wholesome, pure religious thrill. Quoting from "The Modern Temper"—a recent book by Joseph Wood Krutch,—"Every one seeks his salvation as he may." And he further states—"There are no hard facts except the facts of emotion. We feel what we feel and we want what we want with a directness which permits of no possible skepticism. We may doubt the conclusions of our logic, the premises of our philosophy, and even the evidence of our eyes, but we cannot doubt these emotions and these desires."

Ceremonialism

In our reformed ritual, we have done away with practically all forms of ceremonialism. We have removed much of the color and beauty and left but little to appeal to our hearts.

From conversations with our own members, I find there is a demand for more color in the form of ceremonialism in the service. To fill this need many have expressed strong opinions that we should have an up-to-date cantor. Several years ago this matter was proposed, but those attending the meeting then seemed to be about evenly divided on the subject. I know that many more would favor the idea today.

You will recall the tremendous impression created on the congregation during the memorial service to the lamented Louis Marshall by the rendition of "El Male Raḥamim," by a cantor in this very synagogue. People who had never before heard a cantor said it was the most impressive part of the service, and called forth from them a religious feeling that they had never before experienced.*

Human Warmth

To put more color, more ceremonialism into our religious service is being advocated by Jews throughout the country. In the report of the National Federation of Temple Brotherhoods, which sent out a questionnaire to all its members and which classified its replies, it was stated that "perhaps the note most frequently sounded was that there is a coldness in the reformed synagogue, both at services and in congregational contacts. Many go so far as to feel that this is one of the major reasons for much of the lack of interest in the temples." Another universal criticism was that "the temple lacks human warmth."

Participation by the Congregation In the Services

I believe that one of the great faults in our present service is that the congregation takes practically no part in it as worshippers. In the Orthodox synagogue, each worshipper is a rabbi and a cantor unto himself. He is not content to be a mere spectator to the prayers of the rabbi and the chanting of the cantor. He, himself, must utter the prayers in his own way. This, of course, can be carried to extremes, and I am not advocating Orthodoxy. I firmly believe that we should enlarge upon our congregational singing. We have none today. We should have less singing by the choir and more by the congregation. When a man sings, he does not mumble as he does in the responsive reading which he utters in a low monotone, and which makes for a dismal din in the temple.

*The members at the annual meeting May 18 voted that the congregation engage a cantor. —Philip J. Seid, secretary.

Choir

There has grown up in reformed temples a strong sentiment for a strictly Jewish choir that can sing our prayers with their heart's emotion. They feel that a Jewish choir, even though it may not be technically perfect, will, nevertheless, be more acceptable and overcome their lack of training by the quality of Jewish spirit that they will put into their songs.

We have had a very pleasing experience of this on two Friday nights when our own recently-organized adult choir sang the services. We certainly have enough talent among our young people who can be trained to lend all the ceremonial color and emotion to the services. Perhaps you experienced with me the thrill that came from hearing our Hebrew hymns sung by a Jew who understood their meaning,—knew how to pronounce Hebrew, and sung from his heart instead of from a sheet of music.

The Sermon or Lecture

If we introduce more singing into the service, we must either increase its length or eliminate some other features. It is not music as such that carries people away, but the spiritual meaning behind it which leads people to religious expression.

We live in an age of lectures, noon-day luncheons, clubs, and evening courses. Our many forums are built around lectures, and it probably is no longer necessary for us to unduly emphasize this feature in the synagogue service. I believe this matter can be left entirely to the wisdom, diplomacy, and good taste of our rabbis. Many leading rabbis and laymen throughout the country have the firm conviction that on the rabbi's shoulders rests the responsibility for attracting members to services, and that this is the chief function of the rabbi—not the layman.

Art Windows

The charge has been made that the modern synagogue lacks the proper religious atmosphere. Your Board, recognizing this, appointed a committee of which Mr. Sidney M. Siesel is chairman. The committee has contracted with a responsible firm in Munich, Germany to execute the work of our art windows, depicting ancient Jewish traditional history. A sample window is already here for our approval. Within a few months, we hope to be able to have them completed.

All the members of the congregation will be given an opportunity to help pay for the installation of our art windows. The fund could be raised easily by the active co-operation of our congregation and Sisterhood.

An attractive "Book of Life" describing the art windows may be issued and the names of the contributors inscribed. I plead with you that, under no circumstances should the names of contributors be engraved on the windows, themselves. Honors within our sanctuary should not be auctioned, and a source of inspiration for years to come should not be put on sale for money.

Contributions to the window fund may be made in memory of our departed but not advertised in glittering colors forever after. We must emphasize once again the spirit of refinement and modesty within the walls of our temple.

Let us make our house of worship a place of joy instead of a perpetual monument or a constant reminder of our dear departed.

My dear Rabbi Silver:

I am writing this letter to thank you, not only for the generous award of five dollars which I received as a prize in the Temple Ask-me-Another Contest, but also for the kind letter you sent with it. I certainly enjoyed being in the contest, and, as this is my first year in Junior High School, I look forward to entering again next year.

Thanking you again for the prize money, I remain

Very truly yours,

My dear Rabbi:-

You will recall some time ago I asked you about the propriety of using a certain passage from the Bible in connection with an address I was to deliver at Atlantic City.

I thought you might be interested in the address, so am enclosing a copy herewith. While I know it is a far cry from the pulpit to the lumber business, yet, a good pulpit is always made of wood - and there, of course, you have the connection.

With kindest regards,

Cordially yours,

To the President of the United States,
White House,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Honorable President Herbert Hoover:

Three hundred and twenty prisoners incarcerated in closed cells for all kinds of crime committed by them due to lack of opportunities to make an honest living were helplessly roasted to death in our State Penitentiary.

With three hundred billion dollars National Resources waiting for millions of willing workers to develop them, in over-bridging railroad crossings, highway roads, and building Safety Zones of all kinds saving thereby, thousands of human lives annually from accidental deaths, the 'Roasted to Death' prisoners, could have been today, honest supporters of their families and poverty, crime and social disorder may have been greatly reduced, had our Congress been as loyal to our unemployed as it was to our War Profiteering Industries during the war time, but is now so alarmingly absorbed to foist upon our citizens against their will an ATROCIOUS TARIFF BILL THAT WILL BLEED BILLIONS OF DOLLARS ANNUALLY FROM OUR CONSUMERS.

I have reason to believe that you will return the bill when thrust before you for your signature, with your GODS GIVEN RIGHT TO VETO.

Yours sincerely,

MARCUS FEDER SR.,
