WHERE DO OUR MORAL IDEAS COME FROM?
With Special Reference to Professor Breasted's Book
"The Dawn of Conscience"

By Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver

Sunday morning, February 25, 1934.

The moral ideas, my friends, come, of course, from within the life of the human race. They are the result of long living over vast stretches of time on the part of mankind. ~~These~~ moral ideas have come to us because mankind through his long process of trial and error has discovered what is socially desirable and what is socially undesirable -- in other words, what is good and what is bad.

In the Olden Days men believed that their moral ideas and conceptions of right and wrong came to us through some form of miracles, revelations, in dreams or visions. Our study of races, of primitive passions, convinces us that this is not the case. Whatever man knows has come to him out of his own heart and oftentimes with bitter and costly experience. In nature there is neither a within nor a without. It is all one sphere, one world to the religious man, whose creator is God.

Men have speculated as to when the dawn of man's moral life took place, when man actually became conscious of his inner and his moral life. At first man was quite unconscious of moral ethics. Primitive man was not given to introspection nor to any abstract thinking. He lived according to the habits of his tribe. What was socially accepted was socially mandatory. He did not reflect on his inner life, nor upon the value or meaning or sanction of his conduct.

But there soon came a time in the development of the human race when man became quite conscious of his relations, in terms of moral relations, with his fellow men, when man became inquiring, analytical, when he began to ask the meaning of certain things when he became a moral being. Just when that began is problematic. Our data will have to be the earliest documents of man's moral life. These date back about 5000 years and these documents are the documents of the Egyptians. Professor Breasted who recently wrote a very interesting and stimulating book called "The Dawn of Conscience" conjectures that the beginning of man's conscious moral life, took place somewhere around the year 5000 B.C.E. and that it took place in the Valley of the Nile. Dr. Breasted is a great archaeologist, a great Egyptologist and has devoted many years of his life to the deciphering of the hieroglyphics of the ancient records of the Egyptian people. It is therefore readily understood that the central interest of Dr. Breasted would be in Egypt as the home of the original moral speculation of the human race and one can readily understand the temptation to such a man on the basis of his discoveries in the tombs to build up a philosophy and history of morals on the rather scanty evidences uncovered in Egypt. It is very likely that in time older documents documents will be discovered in other lands and that the archaeologists will uncover records of an earlier life. So much of it has been lost.

The Hebrew literature, which survives in the Bible is an insignificant fragment of the total literature which the Jewish people must have produced in those days. In fact the Bible makes much of the lost nineteen books from which the writers drew their material. The Israelites did not write on clay ^{did} as the Babylonians. The Babylonians with the use of the stilus would write in the clay and bake it. That was a document. Some of these documents have been preserved in the British Museum where there are already almost one hundred thousand. The Jews lived in the mountains in Palestine. They did not write on clay. They wrote on skins and parchments which are more readily destroyed. The Egyptians erected huge monuments on which they wrote their codes of law and their history. The written documents of Israel, therefore, are far less than those of Babylonians and Egyptians.

The whole subject of priority, as to who was the first to have produced the great moral teachings is much over-emphasized. After all no race has a monopoly on experiences which yield social judgment and moral values.

Given the same conditions and the same set of experiences any people will yield the same set of ideas. Our moral conceptions have come out of the vast sea of universal experience. They are not the exclusive creation of any one people. Dr. Breasted is therefore clearly unfair in saying that our present moral heritage has come to us from many sources and not exclusively from the Hebrews. He is probably wrong in over-emphasizing the pioneering role which the Egyptians have played in the world's morals.

Dr. Breasted in his book is still fighting those theologians who believed that all religion and all morals were "revealed" to the world, first, to the Hebrews, or that the Hebrews exclusively enjoyed a divine revelation, a notion held exclusively by the orthodox dogmatists. Dr. Breasted demonstrates that there are many ripe social and moral ideals which were known to the Egyptians 3000 B.C.E. which is true. But his conclusion, frequently made as if he were not entirely convinced, that "our moral heritage of the present has come to us rather through the Hebrews than from them" -- is largely unsubstantiated in his book. At times Dr. Breasted presents his thesis in a very acceptable form: "In receiving a great and inspiring moral and religious heritage from the Hebrews, therefore, we may regard it as a demonstrated fact that we have inherited a two-fold legacy, which is made up in the first place of some thousands of years of human experience in the Ancient Near East, chiefly Egypt, before the Hebrew nation arose, and was then in the second place marvelously deepened and enriched out of their own social experience by the prophets and sages of Israel themselves."

At other times he seems to go a step further.

When he says, for example: "in morals, in religion and in social thinking in general, the Hebrews built up their life on Egyptian foundations." And again he speaks of "The prophets of the Hebrews appropriating the social vision of Egypt." Now no one can question the constant interaction of the nations and cultures in the past or in the present. The Egyptian influence in Palestine over many centuries was great. All you have to do is to read the Bible to realize how great. Egypt ruled over Palestine for 400 years before our earliest ancestors came into Palestine. Two of the patriarchs, according to evidence of the Bible, lived in Egypt. Moses was born in Egypt and Joseph lived there. The children of Israel lived there for 400 years. Another record says 240 years so that there was the closest contact between these two peoples. That is also true of the Babylonian influence in Palestine. Abraham was born in Babylon. Babylon was the original home of the Jews. The Babylonians were a great and conquering people whose armies and caravans swept over the whole of Western Asia. Their writings, their commercial practices and their laws were known and copied in Palestine. Undoubtedly they exercised an influence on the development of Jewish life.

But it would be folly to assume that Judaism is nothing more than an aggregate of the teachings and ideas of other people, never creating anything original of its own. The religion of Israel would not have survived while the religion of the Babylonians and Egyptians perished centuries ago. The Bible would not have been the sacred textbook of the world. There must be something unique, something original in the contribution of Israel's religious thought to the world.

A generation ago when the first excavations were being made in Babylonia and Assyria, they discovered some myths and legends which seemed to have their parallel in the Bible. For example, they discovered a Babylonian Creation Story corresponding to the Creation Story in the Bible. They discovered a story of the Flood. They discovered a code of laws. At once people jumped to conclusions. They claimed that the Old Testament is only a collection of Babylonian myths and legends, that Moses was no law giver, merely took over the laws of earlier legislators, that there is nothing original in the Bible. In fact an eminent Assyriologist, Friedrich Delitzsch delivered a lecture before the Kaiser and his Court in which he made much of these parallelisms. He suggested that the ethical ideals of Israel are in many cases inferior to that of the Babylonians, that the Jews made no contribution to the world. That was thirty years ago. Many began to refer everything in the Bible back to Babylonian origin.

Thirty years later, Dr. Breasted writes of Babylon as follows: "Babylonian civilisation, however, was dominated throughout by a spirit of calculating commercialism, of hard and mechanical requirements, which deprived the social evolution of the Babylonians of the very foundations of altruistic development. The basic moral requirements of equal justice to all was totally lacking, and the famous code of Hammurapi's laws dispenses justice according to the social station of the litigant or the offender. The complete obliteration of social distinctions before the law, which is one of the finest achievements of Egyptian civilisation was unknown in Babylonia, and as a result of this fact, Babylonian morals have contributed little if anything to the moral heritage of the West-rn world."

That point of view is now generally accepted. These legends were known to the Babylonians, the Egyptians and the Jews. They are not the specific creation of any people. When the Jews adopted them, however, they refined them, they purged them, they spiritualized them.

It is similarly true with the Egyptian influence on the Jews. Egypt, of course, produced moral ideas. It would be a great mistake to think that a people which lasted for thousands of years would not have produced high ethical concepts. Dr. Breasted does well in pointing them out. He quotes old documents from the Feudal Ages to show that moral ideas were not unknown. A sense of social justice was known to them. He makes much of the religious reformation in the Fourteenth Century whose leader was Ikhнатon.

Ikhнатon became dissatisfied with the idolatrous worship of the Egyptians and he projected a new religion based on the worship of the sun, a universal religion and a very exalted one. He proceeded to destroy the ancient gods of the temple. He moved from the old capital and established a new one at Tell el-Amarna.

(Hymn to sun - similar to Psalm 104 in Bible)

This is a high point of Dr. Breasted's thesis and it falls short in indicating that the religious ideals in Israel were based on the religious ideals of the Egyptians.

With due allowance made for this, Ikhнатon's monotheistic religion was still not a spiritual religion. It was a religion based on the sun, a corporeal thing, a solar deity. Ikhнатon worshiped the sun. The Jewish religion teaches that the sun is not God but that God is the creator of the Sun. Significantly this entire reformation of Ikhнатon lasted less than one generation. It was a flash in the pan. The Egyptian people did not have it in them to produce a high type of spiritual religion. Ikhнатon's reformation could not last. His very name became anathema. Egypt sank back into her supreme concern with the dead and the materialistic.

What Dr. Breasted and others failed to realize is that one important fact: not the similarity which one can find between the teachings of Judaism and other religions, but its dissimilarity. Judaism was a reform movement in religion. It was a deliberate revolutionary religion. It challenged, denounced and rejected more than it accepted. Whatever of the common "urstoff" that it accepted, it refashioned and spiritualized. Over and over again as you read the Bible you find this: "According to the abominations of other nations ye shall not do." Avoid the abominations of other nations. Follow not the abominations of the Babylonians. In Deteronomy we read: "When thou are come into the land which the Lord Thy God giveth thee - thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of other nations. Thereshall not be found among you anyone that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire -- one that useth devination, a soothsayer or an enchanter or a sorcerer or a charmer or one that consulteth a ghost or a familiar spirit or a necromancer."

Judaism was to challenge that type of life directly and its contribution is to be found in the challenge. "Ye shall not defile yourselves with the idols of the Egyptians." The Jews were in close contact with them. They knew their literature. What was fine and noble in it they accepted. But similarly they rejected that which they thought was hostile to a concept of spiritual religion, which was to be significantly their own.

There is practically no mention of the hereafter in the Bible. The Bible says: "The dead do not praise the Lord." But if you travel along the Nile, you will find a sixteen mile long cemetery of tombs and pyramids. On the larger ones particularly you will find inscriptions, magical formulae, symbols, preparing the dead for the nether-world. But no one to this day knows the burial place of Moses. The Jews were forbidden to worship the dead. They were taught not to think in terms of the dead but in terms of life. Yaveh was a living God.

This provision was aimed almost directly against Egypt. Why were images prohibited? As long as religion, as long as god or gods, were material beings they could be represented in images. As soon as god becomes a spiritual reality, mind, intellect, he can no longer be represented in an image. The Jews were beyond the stage of idolatry. The God of Ikhnaton represented a Sun-god in the form of a disk from which rays descended. "Thou shalt not make unto thyself any graven image nor any manner of likeness of any thing that is in the heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath or that is in the water under the earth; thou shalt not bow down unto them, nor serve them." Most of the peoples of antiquity were far more advanced than the Jews. But they never went beyond the stage of idolatry. It was Israel that broke through the law.

Lastly, to my mind, Dr. Breasted and others are not aware of, or seem to overlook that one of the greatest contributions was that the whole people as a people dedicated itself to the propagation of the ideals of religion. Israel made a covenant with the Lord repeated in Deuteronomy to become a people of holy mission propagating knowledge and spiritual idealism to the whole world.

Now the Egyptians never conceived of this nor the Greeks nor the Prussians. No people looked upon itself as commissioned by divine providence to become a missionary of knowledge and spiritual idealism in the world. That is exactly what the Jew did from the earliest times.

The Jew was spiritually sensitive, if you will, to religious values. The gift of the Jew peculiarly lies in the inclination of the people in the direction of the moral and spiritual so that Israel did create new religious values even though it did adopt much from other peoples. They created religious literature of the highest order. They have accepted a religious mission in the world to preserve and to propagate it. It administered to the world religious ideals. Therefore it has influenced the thought of the world. While the thoughtful Jew does not alligate unto himself any priority in religious contributions, he does hold to it and in holding to it derives a sense of pride from the fact that the people of Israel became the champions, the missionaries of religious idealism in the world.

1. Moral ideas, came, of, came, from (within) the life, the race. They are the result of the millemost experience, the race. Mankind has learned what is right what is wrong i.e. what is socially desirable or undesirable, from much living, from trial error.

(a) In older days - from (without) morality was (revealed) to man, by thephaneis - dreams - visions, sacred books etc

(b) The never conception is not (less religious) for the inner life, man and the experience, the race are also of god. In nature there is no inner + no outer - all is within the sphere of the deity, whose creator, to the rel. man, is god.

2. When has long speculated as to when the moral ideas first made their appearance in the life, man - which is probably 1,00,000 yrs. long.

(a) Man at first was probably not conscious of his moral life. His conduct was not analytical, his conduct was a matter of social habits. What was customary in his tribe, that was mandatory for him. He did not reflect upon the his inner life, or upon the value or meaning or consequences, his conduct.

(b) Then came a time, when man became an inquiring & questioning moral being. When moral ideas, in their abstract form began to interest him. When he became conscious, the signs & symbolism of a moral order. (Just when the way emerged into the light of Conscience or Character - it is diff. to say. Our data usually can go back only to the earliest records which have come down to us - and they are, about 5000 yrs. old. The earliest records, concerning the conscience of man is the Valley, the Nile - 5000 years ago - in other words - quite recently! For a million years man has been evol. himself biologically and improving his weapons. But his conscience moral life is only 5000 years old

3. (W. B.) is an archaeologist - an eminent Egyptologist. Most (his life-work) was done in deciphering the records & history of the ancient Egyptians. - His center, interest) as well as his conclusion lies in: Egyptian - It so happens that the most ancient logos, ^{decrees} laws which has so far been uncovered comes from E. The temptation is: just to generalize on the scene, this fact and to construct a pyramid (with speculation upon it - Dr. Unwin did the same thing a generation ago - When their excavations seemed to point to the earliest records, humanity. It is very probable that future arch. research will uncover records, civilization older, > E. - and wisdom, moral insight and judgment which ante-date the (E.)

1. Seus wrote on Parliament - not clay - monuments - 19 books

4. In fact too much emphasis is placed upon the matter of priority. No one people has ever had a monopoly on moral exp. facts. There come out, the best reca of universal human exp. When-ever the same conditions exist, the same set of social experience, the same set of moral values is likely to be evolved. (B. is right) when he stresses in his work that our moral heritage of the present derives from many sources, and not exclusively from the Hebrews. He is probably wrong in his over-emphasis of the pioneering role which the E. has played in the world's moral - and he belongs too much to the credulity of Judaism to the culture & religion of E.

5. He is still fighting the traditional theologians who believed that religion & moral were "revealed" just to

^{in that the Heb. exclusively suggest a direct relationship} the world, to the Hebrews, and by a which held by now but a theory degenerated. He ~~also~~ demonstrates that many social moral ideas were known to the E. 3000 yrs before the Hebrews
- which is true. But his conclusion, frequently ~~made~~ ^{made} and as frequently reworded by the author himself, or if he were not himself entirely convinced - that "our moral heritage has come to us rather through the H. than from them" - is unsubstantiated ~~anywhere~~ throughout.

At other times he declares ~~that~~ "the Hebrews lived up their life" in morals, in religion and in social thinking in general.
the Hebrews lived up their life in E. practices"

And again he speaks, "the prophets, the Hebrews appropriating the social vision of E." (p. 367)

7/ No one need question a doubt the interaction, contact & exchange. That E. influences B. were strong in Pal. before during the settlement, density by Jews - is undeniable.
Records, Bible itself clearly attest it. In 400 yrs from

(1) It would be unthinkable that great E civilization, old when
