great world of God about us is rich with promises of happiness and full of beauty that sanctifies life. It beckons us to return to nature and to the natural, to be at one with the spirit of the universe.

The natural in life has often been misconstrued. Some, and especially the philosophical schools of the eighteenth century, looked upon the primitive state of man as the natural one and therefore the one sublimely felicitous. They saw in the life of the primitive savage unused to the shackles of civilized life and ignorant of the thwarting conventionalities and soulshattering perplexities of a highly organized society, the ideal life. They sang of the unalloyed bliss of the noble savage of the ancient Edens and blessed Arcadias which the hosts of civilization had ruthlessly destroyed. The truth of the matter is that the life of ~~X~~ primitive man was dismal, cheerless, uncertain and uninteresting. His life was filled with vague fears, terrors and superstitions. All physical objects teemed with life and were frequently the abodes of malevolent demons and spirits. He had no more appreciation ~~N~~ of the beauties of nature than has a starved beggar whose thoughts are entirely concentrated on plans for the immediate relief ~~XXXXXXNXXXXXXX~~ from his distress. True appreciation of nature comes ~~N~~ with a certain amount of leisure and comfort, of intellectual insight and of spiritual sensitiveness. Primitive man had none of these and while his state was in truth a natural state it was a very low and crude and uninspiring one.

To the charge that the artifacts of complex civilized life have deprived man of his pristine naturalness, Edmund Purke counters ~~XXXX~~ cleverly when he says that "Art is man's nature". It lies ~~N~~ in the very ~~XXXX~~ nature of spiritual man's evolution that he move from simplicity to complexity, from homogeneity to heterogeneity, from the so-called natural to the so-called artificial. Our civilized society of today with its infinite conventionalities, its countless customs and practices, its manifold diversities, its variegated opinions, its conflicting theories, faiths, and ideals, its tunnels and skyscrapers, its wireless and telephones and its ten thousand other mechanical contrivances which complicate and intensify life, is withal as truly natural as was the savage society of primitive man with its vast sameness and simplicity, its crudeness and obviousness. Nay, more, our life is more natural for it is a phenomenon of nature's higher manifestations.

When therefore, I say that our nature festival beckons us to return to nature and <sup>to</sup> the natural, I do not mean to the primitive and the simple, to the crude and the undultured. I mean that amidst the complexities and intricacies of <sup>our urban</sup> life, these festivals caution us not to permit the dust of commercialism, or the fads and fashions of a superficial social life to deaden our souls to the appeal of the beautiful in nature. Unfortunately such is often the case. We ~~KKKKKKKKKK~~ centralize all our thoughts and energies so completely upon the immediate commercial problem or the social situation that we lose the sense of proportion or perspective. And unconsciously we take the "cackle of our burgh for the great waves that echo round the world". Only an emotional and intellectual appreciation of nature, its vastness, its grandeur, can give back to man the sense of perspective, the ability to evaluate one's own self and one's own ~~KKKKKK~~ sub-specie alterna~~X~~tives(?), from the view point of alternatives(?) ~~KKKKKK~~ eternity.

And our festival ~~K~~ also reminds us that our aesthetic appreciation alone of nature <sup>the</sup> will give to life that zest and meaning and purpose ~~K~~ which renders it enjoyable and sacred. For only the poet - and everyone who loves nature with all his heart and with all his soul ~~K~~ and with all his might is a poet - only ~~K~~ poet gets the full import of life's message. Only he can tap the deep wells of spiritual joy. Only the poet can read the great epic of life written by the finger of God upon the face of the earth. Where the untrained ears of men can hear but the jarring, the wrangling and the discord in life, the poet's ear ~~K~~ catches the soft intonations of heavenly harmonies and where the eyes of earthly men behold but the drabXXXX and the grey, the (wiser?) eye of the poet discerns promises of rainbow glories. To Peter MAX Bell, "A primrose by a river's brim/ A yellow primrose was to him/ And it was nothing more," but the poet "Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks/ Sermons in stones, and good in everything".

The festivalX teaches us that a holy passion for the beautiful in nature will lighten the burdens of our worldly cares. It will create for us in the midst of a desert of adversity an oasis of refuge where our souls may rest in peace in the bosom of mother earth.

Love of nature is a great moral factor in the work of social regeneration. It is for this reason that we emphasize the nature-significance of our festivals today. The man who truly loves nature cannot deliberately be bad. For nature is a XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX mellowing, softening influence in one's life. It teaches sympathy and love and moderation. It makes men aware of their common origin and common destiny. The man who loves a flower cannot hate a fellow man. He who loves sunshine will not deprive little children of it, by entombing them in mills and factories. He who loves the fresh air of God will not entomb human souls in holes of darkness in filthy tenements. He who loves nature will not permit his soul to wallow in the mire of the mean, the sneaky, the cheap, the cowardly. He will be big and free and open and frank even as nature itself is big and free and open and frank.

And when I speak of the love of nature I have no reference to that shallow, superficial and ostentatious love of nature which we all acknowledge and proclaim but rather to that deeper, fuller, truer love that can make us (see missp. - Name?) as it made ~~po~~ catch in the XXXXX note of a thrush a glimpse of another world and another day, a love that can consecrate and ennoble our whole life.

1. A Holiday of joy - poor & sick people & poor people
- ① The only religion which makes a virtue & a mandate of joy.
  - ② Gloom - Cathedral-gloom; music sombre & melancholy;
liturgy - has constant reference to Death; Sin, & the other world: Rejoice music & gaiety dies in the throne-hold of the church.
  - ③ All this derives from belief that (1) this world is only a dark, sinful passage to next world (2) that the body is essentially wicked. - the flesh have

2. As so Judaism - Again & again it is repeated -
- ① worship is not associated with joy. In Deut. 12.
  - ② "Ye shall rejoice before the Lord, your sons - day-laborers maid-servants - <sup>2131</sup> ~~father~~ <sup>62</sup> wife & not work, - in all that thou doest." ~~Rejoice in the Lord~~
  - ③ "Rejoice in the Lord," is the constant refrain of Psalms.
  - ④ Rel. duties are meant to add joy ~~to the world~~
21st psalm to 131ps

3. This derives from 2 convictions - ① world is not
LAND if consider is the only home which man's home -
In it he is to find all the happiness what he can - ② Body is not sinful. It is the soul. P 111 of 2nd 111

URGES CHURCH TO USE LITERATURE

Pastor Tells Methodists to Spread Gospel Through Propaganda.

LOGAN, O., Sept. 16.—The importance of propaganda literature in spreading the gospel of Christianity in America today, especially among aliens and radical groups, was stressed in an address today before the Ohio conference of the Methodist Episcopal church by Rev. William M. Gilbert, Philadelphia.

"The new American never can be evangelized until Protestantism will spend in propaganda literature $100,000, a year where it now spends $1,000," he declared.

"Socialists, communists, Christian Scientists, Russelites, and Seventh Day Adventists all have learned how to use propaganda literature, and now publish in the United States 31 tracts and periodicals in anywhere from eleven to twenty-three different languages."

"Protestantism has made a feeble beginning. I am glad to report that Presbyterians, Congregationalists, and Methodists are uniting in an effort to publish joint periodicals for the Italians, and the Slovaks.

"This move should extend to the Russians, Poles and Lithuanians at once. But even that is only a beginning.

"Tracts by the thousands should be distributed. Every foreign-speaking pastor and bilingual worker should be a colporteur. These tracts should not only be religious, but should also present religion as the gospel of fair play, free personality, and industrial justice."

Speaking of the "so-called radical groups," Rev. Gilbert said: "Here again I must speak plainly."

He characterized such people as "fine folks," and said "they are made of the stuff our Revolutionary fathers were made of."

"Hundreds of thousands in these race groups are so called radicals in their political views," he continued.

"We must face this situation squarely. Has the Christian church no program for them? Are they not human beings included in the plan of redemption?

"Their faith in the Christian church is gone. Their new-found political faith has become practically a religion to thousands of them; other thousands are avowed atheistic.

"They are fine folks. They are made of the stuff our Revolutionary fathers were made of. They came over steerage, just as our fathers did in the Mayflower; they have dared to break with kinsfolk and native land because of principle. We do not agree with them entirely in principle, but we must admit that we admire their courage of conviction.

"Evangelizing the new American is the most difficult and puzzling problem before the church.

"The new Americans come from different races and countries. They are more different in temperament and traditions than they are in geography. For that reason, a separate and distinct program of evangelization must be worked out for the oriental, another for the northern European, another for the southern European, and still another for the Hebrew peoples.

"The direct mission method of the sermon, altar call and prayer will of itself never adequately meet the situation, for the simple reason that where a mission may secure the attendance and witness the conversion of ten, twenty or even 100 new Americans, its message never touches hundreds of thousands more who never darken its door.

"In the Harlem district of New York are 160,000 Jews. By their own authority they admit that the synagogues are only in touch with about 10,000. Therefore, then, in that neighborhood 160,000 non-religious, and many of them anti-religious, Jews live. How can they hear where no voice comes to them?"

"I don't know exactly what occurred in New York," Mr. MacBain said last night, "but I understand the workmen refused the railroad plan."

Employment for local shops of the New York Central had almost ceased before word came Thursday to discontinue hiring. Both Mr. MacBain and the Field company said few men were needed at present.

A number of men doing guard duty were laid off last week. These will be taken back or replaced, Mr. MacBain indicated.

26 ARRESTED IN RAIDS

Charged With Violating Dry Laws by State Authorities.

(Plain Dealer Special)

SPRINGFIELD, O., Sept. 16.—Twenty-three persons were arrested here last night and today by state prohibition agents and deputy sheriffs in the biggest round up of alleged prohibition law violators ever staged in Springfield.

The officials acted on information gathered previously by state agents, who had been working quietly in the city for the last three weeks.

From one to five separate charges of violating the prohibition laws were placed against each person arrested and in some cases second offenses were charged.

All of the persons arrested pleaded not guilty when arraigned before Probate Judge Harry Gram, and were held under bonds aggregating $25,000 for hearings.
