

Abba Hillel Silver Collection Digitization Project

Featuring collections from the Western Reserve Historical Society and The Jacob Rader Marcus Center of the American Jewish Archives

MS-4787: Abba Hillel Silver Papers, 1902-1989.
Series IV: Sermons, 1914-1963, undated.

Reel
169

Box
62

Folder
1162

Day of Atonement, 1925.

Yom Kippur 1925*

date uncertain

It calls us back - the and the lost to the bosom of the synagogue. I mean not only the synagogue of prayer. Prayer is of course the very soul of the synagogue - the synagogue discovered prayer, and taught men the prayer of heart and life for the sacrifice of . Many of us have lost the gift of prayer, and so have lost their way to the peace and consolation which come with prayer. (I mean?) The synagogue means more. It means (?) keeping faith with those who still suffer from (I mean?) and discrimination. It means loyalty to an ideal of universal brotherhood. "My house shall be a house of called prayer for all peoples".

Israel, said a great philosopher of the middle ages, is the heart of humanity. Israel gives the spiritual life-blood to mankind. Its heartbeats are the rhythm of religious progress. If Israel is the heart of humanity, the synagogue is the heart of Israel. We live as it lives. It is not ~~MARKED~~ our eleemosynary(?) institutions, our hospitals and orphanages, which are the heart of Israel. The synagogue gave rise to them all. They were born in the synagogue. Other blessed agencies for the relief of suffering and want will yet come forth out of the synagogue. But the spiritual dynamo which drives all our efforts, the motivating impulse, the radiating centre of our life is the synagogue. The Synagogue means the love of the Torah, the fostering of Jewish learning and education, of purity and nobility. It means the pursuit of justice and the practice of mercy, and the walking humbly with God. It means loyalty to the magnificent life of one brotherhood, in the fatherhood of one God.

One prayer which sums up the message of the Day is: (Hebrew p'sukei)

- Young and old, bonded in faith, united by common memories and hopes, shall through faith and works, through loyalties and high consecration do the will of our Heavenly Father.

2. (portion missing?)

Spain was not the only land where the ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ Jew improvised such rudimentary sanctuaries for his faith, nor was the 15 century the only century. At no time was the life of the Jew so secure, and his fortunes so high that he could build for himself synagogues to rival the beauty and grandeur of cathedrals and mosques. Only a happy people, whose life is grounded in permanence and security, and a prosperous one, can build such architectural monuments to the spiritual yearnings of its life. A wandering people must carry its Ark of its Covenant along with it on its wanderings, and when it rests for a space, it can at best set up a temporary tabernacle to house its sanctities. Oftentimes it is compelled to carry its shrine in its own heart, hidden from the ~~XXXXXXXXXXXX~~ hateful gaze of men.

So that, our synagogues are as a rule humble ~~XXX~~ structures, many poor and unattractive. With the few exceptions in the larger metropolises and those of recent years, you will find nowhere ~~XXXXXX~~ in the old world synagogues of vast naves, and towering spires, columned in strength and pinnacled in aspiring glory, edifices whose windows, flushed and intense with tint and color hold in their imbued life all the passion and joy of a free creative people, and whose vast overarching domes suggest the spaciousness of its life. It is only in recent years, and in the lands of freedom, that our people has begun in the confidence and joy of its new-found freedom, to match in stone and marble the beauty of its faith. As a rule you will find the houses of Israel in prayer of the old world ~~XXXXXX~~ gray and bleak and small, in narrow streets and crowded-out spaces, where once the ghetto stood in all its mean abjectness. Tourists do not seek them out for there is little there to catch and hold the eye. Unless it be the eye of one who knows the shabby dress in which the world always cloaks its dreams...

I suppose the artist Sargent who painted the synagogue had these unattractive, unpretentious (fanés,) houses of worship of Israel in mind when he represented (depicted) the synagogue as a withered, haggard old woman, sitting among ruins, while the church as a beautiful young woman of spiritual charm and loveliness. So it must appear to all who look from without, to all who see things and not through things.

Put to those who see from within what unearthly beauty do they discover within those very grey walls. "How beautiful are thy tents, O Jacob!" What splendor of heroic faith, of matchless, loyalty, of dauntless courage, dwells there! The beauty which others sought in the gothic column and classic frieze the Jew sought in the line and contour of a spiritual structure. The outer walls may have been unsightly. The inner shrine was of matchless perfection. Beneath a low roof, within barren, unadorned walls, he reared a sanctuary of rare spiritual artistry. The poetry and romance of his life found expression in its pious hymns and chants, in the intellectual vigor of his mind, in study and speculation of its sacred tomes, the passions of his soul in the sacrificial ideals of justice and truth, nurtured there. The synagogue was a living, breathing presence, and the pious worshippers could truly exclaim - It is a better day in thy courts than a thousand elsewhere.

Do you wish to know, cries a modern Hebrew poet, the source whence thy slaughtered and massacred brothers drew the strength to face death smilingly.

Do you wish to know whence they found that patience, fortitude and endless consolation to bear the burden of a beaten, hounded life. Do you wish to know where they treasured the mighty spirit of the race which remained indomitably young amidst the aging toll of the centuries. Come with me to the synagogue, where in the gathering gloom of a setting winter's (day? sun?) you will find, perchance, two or three sons of thy people, worn and wearied of life, children of the exile, bent over a holy book, forgetting their perplexed lives in a ^{then} page of the Talmud, or in the chant of a psalm of David. and you will see with your own eyes the treasure house of thy people's spirit. And you will stand upon the threshold of the Temple of our life.

If you were to ask me what is the greatest creation of the Jew, I would say the synagogue. No institution of Israel so adequately expresses ~~KM~~ its spirit. The synagogue was born in exile, in the Babylonian exile, after the Temple in Jergalem was destroyed. It continued to exist after the return from captivity and the rebuilding of the Temple. It was the creation of the masses, of the laymen. It was democratic. It had no priesthood. It had no hierarchy. It had no sacrifices. It was a place of prayer, study and assembly. Born of the people, it wandered with the people. Wherever fortune cast the sons of Israel there they met and founded a community whose rallying youth center was the synagogue. It harbored the genius of the race. There the ~~XXXX~~ was taught. There the rabbis fashioned the law to meet the advancing life and ^{tootthe} needs of the people. There ~~MM~~ stranger was welcomed and the poor and needy succored.

The synagogue, in its hold upon the lives of the people, soon eclipsed the Temple in Jerusalem, and when the Temple was destroyed a second time, the synagogue took complete possession of the life of our people. In and Israel turned to the synagogue. It became the refuge of the persecuted spirit of our people during the dark ages. It was treasured and safeguarded. "Do you wish to know -" Oftimes the synagogue witnessed the saddest of tragedies. Oftimes, during the Crusades, it was forced to see its children tortured to death within its very walls, and the sacred scrolls defiled. Oftimes it witnessed its sons and ~~XXXXXX~~ daughters putting each other to death with thier own hands rather than fall into the hands of the savage mob. In our day ~~XXXX~~ it witnessed such tragedies as in the bloody Ukraine. Did you read the story of the Jewish community of Sokolovko? One of five hundred wiped out by the massacring hordes ~~or~~ in the Gehenna of the Ukraine.

It was on Yom Kippur Day, 1921, and the entire community of Sokolovko was assembled in the synagogue. Kozakov, the bloodiest of the Cossack band of devils and his hordes entered the town, broke into the synagogue and commanded the elders to take the scrolls from the Ark and march round the synagogue singing and dancing as is the custom on the Day of the Rejoicing with the Law. It amused him to see the frightened and defenceless Jews thus parade in forced merriment before him. He then commanded that they march to the square of the town, with their rabbi at the head of the procession. The venerable patriarch divined the tragedy that was awaiting them, and so he requested his people to turn towards the Ark and to repeat with him seven times (All mey for Hebrew) The Lord, He is God! - The battle cry of the meek and the lowly who fight without arms the battles of the Lord of Hosts. And then he led them with head erect and unfaltering step to the open square. They were lined up in a semi-circle, the rabbi in the center, the elders dressed in white, for it was Yom Kippur Day, on either side of him. A brutal order rang out, and 188 men, women and children - the whole community of Sokolovko, were shot down. (see mey for Hebrew) The synagogue heard that cry of the unfortunate, and stored it away for the ages, along with other cries, and other scenes.

**

It is of these scenes, and these cries, that the synagogue is built. Whether we worship in marble fanes or humbler sanctuaries, this is the synagogue which must enfold us in its mantle of dreams and memories.

 Not of stone and brick but of heart throbs, of life beats, of incident(?) and crisis, of events and history, of quality and character. A people, it is said, is composed of the dead, even more than of the living. It is so with the synagogue.

It is well that we should build when God has blessed us with peace, and freedom and affluence, sanctuaries of strength and beauty. "Shall we dwell in houses of cedar and the Ark of God within curtains!" A city said the rabbis, whose roofs are taller than the roof of its synagogue will be destroyed. If our lives are fairer today and more spacious, happier and more secure, our synagogues, their symbol and expression, must likewise be more spacious and fair. But the spiritual shrine which the outer walls encompass must be of the same exquisite ideality, the same profound simplicity, the same soul-stuff and heart-throb, the same memories and associations, as that which dwelt within the synagogue of Sokolevko, or in the secret fane of the persecuted in Spain.

This is the theme and message of the Kol Nidre legend - the faith of those whom adversity swept. God must be our faith. The synagogue which they built out of the blood, and tears, the joys and the sorrows, the faith and dreams of their lives must be our synagogue.

Let calls us back - the blessing and the lost You High Priest, my friends, should bring us closer to this blessed synagogue. I mean not only to the synagogue as the place of Jewish worship. ^{That too, I know, is ~~desirably~~ the very place} ~~but~~ ^{of the synagogue I by day you} described "Kavod" and pray let us all ~~be~~ ^{the} called. Men should pray. I mean should set aside hours for meditation and prayer. Men should learn to recall connection with God thru the channel of prayer. Many of us have lost the gift of prayer, and so have lost their way to the peace and consolation which come with ~~secret~~ prayer. But I ~~mean more when I speak of coming closer to the synagogue.~~ ~~I mean~~ coming closer to its soul, to its spirit, to its mission.

You High Priest, and the mighty cadence of the liturgy, ought to ^{tip} resound the our hearts to greater loyalty. Loyalty to our people, loyalty to our Torah, loyalty to our brethren hope of the synagogue - "thy name shall be called a house of prayer for all peoples" —

Israel, said a great philosopher of the Middle Ages, is the heart of humanity. Israel gives the spiritual life-blood to mankind. Its heart beats are the rhythm of religious progress. If Israel is the heart of humanity, the synagogue is the heart of Israel. We live as it lives. It is not we who ^{clandestinely} withhold, our hospitals and orphanages which are the heart of Israel. The synagogue gave rise to them all. They were born in the synagogue. Other beloved agencies for the relief of suffering and want will yet come forth out of the synagogue. But the spiritual hymns which touch all our efforts, the motivating impulse, the radiating centre of our life is the synagogue.
 The synagogue wears the book of the Torah — of purity and ~~nobility~~^{nobility} it meant the purity of justice and the practice of mercy, and the walking humbly with God — it meant by all the ~~members~~^{men} of the ~~assembly~~^{assembly} brotherhood and in the ~~assembly~~^{assembly} one God.

One prayer which sums up the message of the Day is Job 11:16-38 & 16

— young and old, burdened in faith united by common memories and hopes, shall their faith and works, their togethers as taught ~~as we~~^{WRHS} with us all go in Heavenly Father.

²⁸
A crushed group of hunted men ^{praying in whispering breath} following out their brother's bones, scattering ^{and} thus exposed ^{their} ^{precious} ^{memories}, is after most forcible ^{and} ^{eloquent} ^{expression} of ^{any} ^{but} ^{the} ^{most} ^{intense} ^{emotions}.

Spain was not the only land (ans the 15^{c.} the only century) where the Jew ^{sympathetic with} built such monumental and superstitious sanctuaries for his faith, nor ^{the} 15^{c.} the only century, for the hate and fear of ^{the} spirit were limited to no one country and no one age. At no time ^{and no place} was the life of the Jew so ^{secure} certain, and his fortunes so ^{high} ^{uncertain} that he could build for himself synagogues to rival the beauty and grandeur of Cathedrals and mosques. Only a happy people ^{whose life is grounded in permanence and stability} enjoys peace and security. ^{can} ^{and} ^{only} ^{material} movements to ^{spiritual} ^{permanence}. A wandering people must carry its art & its covenant along ^{with it} in its wanderings, and when it rests for a space it can at best set up a temporary tabernacle ^{to} where its sanctities. Of course it ^{cannot} carry ^{its shrines} in its heart, hidden from the hateful gaze of men.

So that, ^{as well} ⁱⁿ ^{years} ^{as} ^{humble} ^{strangers} ^{many} ^{far} ^{and} ^{anglogether}, with few exceptions in the large metropoles and those of more recent years, you will find nowhere in the old world synagogues of vast naves and towering spires, colonnades in strength and pinnacles in aspiring glory, edifices whose emulators flunked and intermixed with tint and color held in their imbedded life all the passion and joy of a free creative ^{life}, and whose vast overhanging domes ^{may} ^{not} ^{exist} ^{all} ^{its} spacious life. It is only in recent years, and in the lands of freedom that the one people has been allowed to in the confidence and joy of its new found freedom, to ^{be} ~~express~~ ^{watch} the beauty & magnificence of its faith. As a rule

With old age

3

You will find the houses of prayer of Israel, gray, and bleak and small, in narrow streets and crowded-out spaces, where once the ghetto saint stood in all ^{all} ~~its~~ ^{ways} ~~abject~~ ^{old} ~~ways~~ ^{age}. Tourists do not seek them out for there is little there to catch and hold the eye. Unless it be the eye of one who knows the shabby dress in which the world always cloaks its dreams...

I suppose the artist Sargent who painted the Synagogue had these unattractive ^{faces} ~~worship~~ ^{of Israel} in mind when he depicted the Synagogue as a withered, haggard old woman, ^{sitting} among the ruins. While the Church, he represented as a beautiful young woman of spiritual charm and ^{who look from wth heart} ~~beauties~~ ^{beauty}.

So it must appear to all ^{outsiders} to all who see things and not thus things.

But to those who are within and ^{who see} from without what unearthly beauty do they discern ^{within} in these gray walls. What message of "How beautiful are thy tents, O Jacob!" What splendor of heroic faith, of matchless loyalty, of dauntless courage, dwells there! What tender memories! What spirits hover round the sacred altar; what voices speak from out the many tones of sacred love!

~~(*)~~ Who you wish to know, cries a modern Hebrew poet, the voice whence they slaughtered and massacred brothers drew the strength to face death smilingly, Who you wish to know whence they ^{found} that fatherly strength and godlike consolation to bear the burden of a broken, benumbed life, Who you wish to know where they ^{invoked} ~~where~~ ^{invoked} ~~where~~ ^{where} the ^{spirit} which

The beauty which others sought in Gothic columns and classic frieze, th ^{want} Jew ~~sought~~ in the bould and contort. ^{line} and ^{beauty} ~~admiration~~ of human tools & spirit not magazine strength. He ~~built~~ his The outer walls were ~~unpossessing~~ may have been unsightly. The inner shrine was of matchless perfection - beneath a low roof ~~hiding~~ amidst bare ~~adorned~~ ~~what~~ ~~were~~ walls - ~~to~~ be named a sanctuary of rare spiritual austerity. The poesy and romance of his life found expression in poems of the choicer and bolder. The intellectual vigor in study and speculation & the passion of his soul in the contemplation of justice and truth.
marked the Jew ~~as~~ ^{WRHS} than the synagogue was a living, breathing person, a beloved radiant person, and the pious worshippers could truly exclaim; It is better a day with you than a thousand elsewhere.

If you were to ask me —

4 remained wisdom freely giving amidst the aging too of the Centuries. Come with me to the Synagogue, where is the gathering place of a ~~wandering~~ ^{settling} nation, & you will find, perchance, two or three ~~sons~~ ^{sons of the people} ~~of Jacob~~, ^{hence} ^{hence you a} ~~holy~~ lock worn and weaved of life, ~~children~~ ^{wooden} of the Exile, just as they then perplexed him in a passage of the Talmud, or in the chant ^{own} of a psalm of David, and you will then see with your ^{own} eyes the treasure house of ~~the~~ ^{the} people and you will stand upon the threshing floor of the Temple of our life://

If you were to ask me what is the greatest ~~spiritual~~ creation of the Jew, I would say The Synagogue.
No institution of Israel so adequately expresses its spirit. The Synagogue was born in Exile - in the Babylonian exile, after the Temple in Jerusalem had been destroyed. It continued to exist after the return from captivity and the rebuilding of the Temple. ^{It was} ~~it had~~ ^{it had no} ^{dearly} the creation of ^{of} lay men. It had no priesthood. It had no sacrifices. It was a place of prayer, study and assembly. ^{It was} ~~it was~~ ^{born} of the people, it wandered with the people. Whereas Jupiter cast the scattered sons of Israel, there they met and formed a community whose rallying ^{center} ~~point~~ was the Synagogue - it harbored the genius, the rare. There the faith was taught. There the Rabbis ^{and used} fashioned the law to meet the advancing life, the people. There too the stranger was welcomed, and the poor & needy succored.

The ~~synagogue~~^{was held after the loss of the people} soon eclipsed the Temple in Jerusalem,⁵ and when the Temple was destroyed a second time, the synagogue took complete possession ~~of the~~^{of the} life of the people. It became the refuge, the persecuted spirit of the people during the dark ages. Its history. ~~underneath~~^{Amidst} its bleak walls, and low roof, among the worn, yellow stones, ^{the dust} he found his world ~~within~~^{He had this removed} the world without was deceived him. — And it was a beautiful world, in which God and his messengers, angels — love, faith, hope, and truth, dwelt. Oftentimes the synagogue witnessed the ~~bloody~~^{Widder} tragedies — Oft times, as during the Crusades, it was forced to see its children ^{thrust} put to death ^{with} in the its very walls, and the sacred scrolls desecrated. Oft times, it witnessed the sons and daughters putting each other to death rather than ^{fall} into the hands of the ~~fanatic~~^{savage} ^{on May the} executioners. Oft times it witnessed such tragedies as occurred in no man's land just 2 years ago in the Bloody Ukraine. This is the story, the Jewish community of Sokolovka ^{had} of few hundred wiped out by the massacring bands ^{in the ghettos} of the Ukraine.

It was on Yom Kippur May, 1921, and the entire community of Sokolovka was assembled in the synagogue. Kogatov, the bloodiest of the Cossack band of devils, came upon the and his hordes entered the town, broke into the ^{take the} synagogue ^{and} and commanded the elders to march round the synagogue singing ^{and dancing} as is the custom on the day of the

It was learned there and sappuaded. We Jewish know —

Reproach with the law. It caused him to see the frightened and despondent Jews thus parade in forced levity before his eyes before him. He then commanded that they march to the square of the town with their Rabbi at the head of the procession. The venerable patriarch recited the liturgy that was awaiting them, and so he requested his people to turn towards the ark and repeat with him seven times psalm 118. The Lord He is God! - the battle cry of the weak and the lowly who fight without arms the battles of the just, Heros - And he then led them with head erect and unfeathering step to the open square. They were lined up in a semi-circle, the Rabbi in the center, the Elders dressed in white, for it was Yom Kippur day, on either side of him.
A brutal order rang out, and 188 men, women and children - the whole community of Sokolovsko, were shot down. Those who did not die, were stabbed and cut to death -

The Synagogue heard that cry, the unfortunate - 188 souls - and it shred it away for the ages - along with other cries, and other scenes. It is, there I leave, and there comes that the synagogue is built ^{WT.} ~~It is built of best blocks, and whether we worship~~ in marble fanes or humbler sanctuaries, this is the synagogue which ^{WT.} ~~surpasses~~ us in its mantle of dreams and memories - And of this synagogue - do the morning part - the former you passed, the rest in greater associations, the faithful sing the ovalament to this day exclaims: "It is better a day in the Cerit, than a thousand elsewhere -

A people, it is said, is composed of the dead, even more than of the living. It is so with the synagogue.

red of stone and brick but of heart the walls of life speak of wisdom and virtue ^{of great} ~~and history~~ quality and character.

It is well that we should build when God has blessed us with peace and freedom and affluence, such marks of strength and beauty.
~~Shall the oak~~⁶, for we dwell in houses of cedar and the ~~be~~ ark of God within curtains.
A city said the Rabbi, where roofs are taller than the roof of the synagogue will be besieged — If our lips are ~~full~~ full and our spangles, happier and more secure are my ~~us~~ eyes — ~~then~~ joyful and exulting in my Merriment be my ~~WHD~~ ^{WHD} ~~Specimen~~ fair. But the spiritual shrine ~~the~~  walls encompass must be of the same exquisite ideality, the same profound spirituality, the same soul stuff and heat, ~~that~~ ^{the same} as that which dwelt within the synagogue of Sholom, in the recent past, the ~~Speculated~~ in Paris, ~~in~~ ⁱⁿ ~~the~~ ⁱⁿ Agend —

This is the theme and message of the folio he began — The faith of those who in ~~adhering~~ ^{to} ~~the~~ ^{my} ~~synagogue~~ ^{my} God must be on faith — They revere which they built out of the Word, and fears the pop and the ~~fathers~~ ^{and depend} their bairns must be on ~~synagog~~

1. Such men face death with serenity. There are men who fear death, because they have wasted their lives. There are ~~weak~~ men who welcome death because they are tired of life. True men face death with equanimity, neither fearing nor wishing it; a natural act.

I know the night is near at hand:

The mists lie low on hill and bay,

The autumn leaves are dewless, dry;

But I have had the day.

Yes, I have had, dear Lord, the day:

When at Thy call I have the night,

Brief be the twilight as I pass

From light to dark, from dark to light.

---Sillas Wier Mitchell

1. Such men face death with relics.^{YJ.} - There are fragment men who fear death, bco they has worked their life.
There are men who welcome death here. They are tired of life - True men face death with & grandly neither fearing nor envying it - a natural act.

1. I know etc. —

I know the night is near at hand:
The rooks lie low on hill and bay,
The autumn sheaves are dewless, dry;
But I have had the day.

yes, I have had, dear Lord, the day;
When at thy call I have the night,
Brief be the twilight as I pass
From light to dark, from dark to light.

— Silas Weir Mitchell

Yom Kippur 1925 (memorial service)

You think of your dead. What do you recall? Their physical appearance? It is probably very vague by now, the picture of your beloved. Even ~~are~~ when they ~~were~~ alive we have at times difficulty in remembering how they look. Do you think of the commonplace acts of their days, the countless acts which they in common with all other human beings perform. Hardly. Even in their life they did not particularly impress you. Faults? Failings? The grass has long ago closed over any weaknesses which may have been theirs. We do not remember what charity would forgive and forget. What do you recall? Their sweetness, beautiful qualities, companionship, the fine influence which they exerted on your life. Their true self. What is our true self? Not our corruptible bodies, etc.

The memory of our dear ones should inspire us to emulate their true selves, to become like them an influence, a memory that someone will treasure. And what more imperishable monument can we ask for in this transitory world, than to have someone say, long after we have returned to our kindred at rest, "I had another, and she was the soul of goodness; she gave her love and her life, her youth and her beauty to us. She ~~was~~ never wavered in the face of sacrifice. I had a father, once, the soul of honor. He gave his manhood to build a home. He taught me honor and integrity. Men loved him for his kindness, admired him for rectitude. I had a son once, and I was so proud of him - manly and upright, thoughtful and devoted. He radiated warmth and strength. I had a friend once. He invited me into the sanctuary of his soul. He shared his thoughts and dreams! Is this not immortality? Ovid - parents slave to leave children wealth!

not

And does this dictate to us the kind of life we should live? Purposeful?

(portion missing?)

1. You think you are dead, what do you recall? Their physical appearance? It is probably very vague by now, the features you beloved. Even when they are alive we have but little difficulty in remembering how they look.
 2. Who do you think of the commonplace acts of their days - the countless single acts which they in common with all other human being perform. Starily. Even in their life they did not particular impress you.
 3. Faults - failings? The queen has lay eggs colored other day ~~which~~^{wisdom} which may have been there, but I do not remember what it clearly enough forgive, and forget.
 4. What do you recall?
1. Their virtues, beautiful qualities, companionship, the true influence which they exerted on your life. Their true self. What a man true self? Not an corruptible bodies etc —

2. The memory of an dear ones should inspire us to emulate their true selves to become like them an influence - some a memory that soon we will forget - but what we influential movement can ever act upon this country world than to have some one say - long after we have returned to our kindred dust - "I had a mother, and she was the soul of goodness; she gave her last sigh before her death when beauty ~~to me~~ she was more wretched in the face of sacrifice. I had a father over the soul of honor. he gave his manhood to travel a hour. he taught it can honor and integrity. Men tested him for his kindness, adusted him for rectitude. I had a son once, and I was so proud of him - mainly rapping it - that just told or not - He nobly does without of every thing." I had a friend once he invited me into the sanctuary of his son. he showed his this dream — Is not this ungrateful?
3. Providence - Parents plan to break children wealth. And does not this dictate to us the kind of life we should live? - Purposeful?

1. This is a great prayer in an liturgy, recited on the afternoon, the Day of atonement called Yom Kippur. We shall declare the weight and holiness of this Day⁴ — the ^{reverenced} ~~awful~~ and ~~frightful~~ Day of Atonement. The Prayer is indeed uniquely depict God as the great judge, who as You K. cause all souls to pass before Him, little as the Shepherd causes his sheep to pass under his rod, — and ~~pronounces~~ ^{thus pronounced} sentence upon each them all. How many are to pass away, & how many are to be born, who are to perish by the sword and who by hunger, who shall have refuge with shall be troubled. Who shall become poor & who shall become rich; the whole catalogue, human woe and woe is enumerated. The ^{thus pronounced} judgments, are ~~irreversible~~, But, concludes the Prayer.

WRHS LIBRARY APRIL 1974 725.101.2011

Repentance, Prayer and Charity against the Evil decree.

It is, of course evident, at the very outset that this act of this prayer is ~~of course~~ cast in a poetical mold. It should not be taken literally. God's eternal justice is not dispensed on ~~out~~ one day of the year only. Every day man is upheld by ~~His~~ ^{His} eternal laws, by them, every day the people of earth ^{in the life of man, again, it is clear that this} with infidelity, certainty, ~~and~~ ^{in the life of man, again, it is clear that this} be interpreted is a purely materialistic way. It has a profound spiritual implication which far transcends its apparent surface meaning.

3. Repent. R. not only against the Evil decree! What evil decree? ~~which not only~~ ^{it} take it to mean, not merely the ^{decree} sentence of death "indicated" ^{& the life of I am} a physical weight which may have been passed upon a mortal. Rather, the fatal decree of finitude and limitation which was pronounced at the beginning of time. From its very origin (and because of inherent ~~goodness~~ ^{caught up in the corrupted currents} the race man is enmeshed in sin and corruption. Physically man is ^{perfect} ~~full~~ of impurities and maladjustments which bring disease and death ^{to his door}. Mentally he is circumcubed by his narrow ^{and by his faulty sense} experience and engulfed in vast ignorance. And morally he is the constant victim of our perverting passions and the sharpest tempter ^{a peccator} hosts. — Man began his career in the jungle and the jungle ^{And always} ~~is~~ ^{is} his ^{the original purpose the outcome} ~~agent~~ ^{and tools} are his to-day. Even ^{now} ~~now~~ those who believe that man began his career in ^{that} ~~paradise~~ ^{saw} already ^{dark & wily} ~~lurking~~ the ^{This is the} ~~fate~~ ^{evil} Satan which prest man's evolution. — ~~the~~ ^{is} ~~evil~~ ~~Satan~~, hangs over man like a pall. It is enveloped in his very humanity. Man was not created & scraps or ~~an~~ angle but man, C 31, of earth and blood — ^{cold} ~~is~~ ^{not} ~~hot~~ ^{When the} earth was ^{no longer without} ~~perishing~~ ^{no longer} ~~without~~ ^{bleeding} ^{When the} 4. Is the decree irreverable? To man ^{as it was} ^{it also} ^{perishes} doomed to the dungeon ^{leaving} his jungle instincts, his turp. tuli and his blindness. Can man ^{ever} rise above his limitations, to a freer & fuller life? Our ^{large} opinion the inequitable reply, ^{as well as} ~~on~~ the way. ^{to} ~~salvation~~. But Repentance, Pi. & Ch. avert the evil decree. (Mr)

2

5. ~~The way~~ is a three-fold way. It is the way of aspirations: as far as ^{man} aspires to be true to himself, which is 1st; and true to your neighbor, which is 2nd; and true to your God, which is 3rd, do ^{moral} ~~as~~ avert the tragic decree of your finite soul — and made ^{your} way the decree is not irreversible. The initial handicap of man is not fatal. Man can overpass his the hurdles which destroy him placed in his way. His load is heavy, but the race can be run to victory. But how? how? What power is there that can break the hold of the sinister forces upon man; ignorance. The power is the power of despairism, and the way is the way of Reft. R. & Chas Th. (atk)

Pearce
T. T.
Sarah. Sarah.
Brooks

The ~~way~~^{is} is the ~~way~~^{power} of aspiration! However feeble may th³ odds against us, however seemingly insurmountable th³ ~~internal~~ obstacles our duty is ~~clear~~^{clear} we must strive to surmount them! Our task is thin our faint was to ~~turn~~^{turn to} infinite, to fit th ideal into ~~over the~~ very makeshift of our mortal frame.
We are not Gods and yet it is our dev^s as duty as privilege ~~and~~^{of} express infinite beauty thru the pitifully inadequate tools of paint and brush, of clay and stone, thru a piece ^{and} word and a few faint ~~traces~~^{traces} stretched ^{and} over it! We are not gods omnipotent and yet it is our heroic task to express infinite goodness thru commonplace acts and relationships and infinite justice thru daily humdrum of shade and occupation.

Our wings may be the war wings of Leviathan, but like him we expect (nevertheless) birds to the skies even if they betray us when we near our goal, and hurl us to our doom!

6. The ~~way~~^{is} the ~~way~~^{power} of aspiration! Our very weakness, is in a sense our strength. Our frustrations are our opportunities. Were we all-powerful, our achievements would bring with them no satisfaction. One is never proud of having vanquished a child, or of having outwitted a blind man.
The strength of our opponent lends relish to our victory, even ^{though} it renders it difficult and often impossible, a perfect world without the forman a useless world. The presence of sin, for example, in the world, imminent and real, always lurking at the door, dangerous and pernicious, ready to attack the Prayer and the best of us, keep men morally alert just as the presence of the enemy keeps the soldier vigilant and fit; and it is this moral guardiness, this ethical self-discipline in the form of a conscientious life, which constitutes the whole glorious spirit of human life. —

4

7. Our prayer promises us that the faithful warfare can be conducted thru persistent aspiration; and it also embodies the three-fold ^{manly} ~~method~~ ^{offer} of the aspiration. ~~221A~~ - Reformation! What is ~~Reform~~? It means return: Return to what? to an ideal self. We have all of us intuitions of what we ought to be; of what we should like to be; if the Every man carries up his heart, a picture himself as he would wish himself to be, one which he is friend, that he would like to be friend of, his higher self; Himself freed from thicket and blemishes which are the result of ~~our~~ ^{common} ~~material~~ ^{destitution} ~~of our~~ That is man's true self & man's ~~true~~ goal! Every sin which he commits is a departure from that ideal, a turning aside, a back-sliding, a thumb-back to the jungle-life. ~~221A~~ is: the art of forcing oneself to return to his ideal self- to be true to the highest self —

1. In the act of True Right it is: not so important that a man should be specially ^{deprived of} ~~redressed~~ ~~over~~ that he should be red over his offenses, and afflict himself. ~~It is~~ all important that he should

This imaginary picture of ourselves is the ladder of our lives - It attracts us, and moves forward and upward. It is the moral magnetic pull.

5

make th determinat^{on} to set himself right with himself concerng his life by th company of his ^{own} ideal that he should ^{endeavor} to establish even contact between himself and his advancing ideal ^{of himself}, from which he had been delected. Of course a man must think of his past errors. Of course he must reflect the wrong done. These are pre-reqs. But it is not for man to before on top, and ~~and~~ make a walk it central in our moral thought. Rather should a man think of the good. We keep in ^{mind} by a sense of How we give us the man who ~~theater~~ has a high estimation of himself, and, his place in the world and in the universal, who is proud, his gifts and talents the ~~weakness~~ and ^{and finds few young men} of his than any other ^{will} help himself unscathed by sin or misdeavors - He will not stop to sin. For sin is to him a degradation, a lowering of self, a cheapening of self. He will refrain from wrong not bec. he is afraid of punishment, human or divine. But he will not care his worth himself in his own eyes. He will not care his self pride and leave his self ~~confidante~~ which is in ^{his} heart ^{most precious} ^{which is} self restoration, doing one's duty by one's self make us one with others

8. The second way of aspiration is the way of faith.
Prayer is the supreme sacrament of faith.
Prayer is the lifting of our souls to the point of highest ascend - ~~soul~~. ^{as far as the possible will be} Prayer is the lifting of the soul to the skies. The mechanical prayer of petitioning is bad, which never ascends.
"Wade without thoughts' never to heaven so." Translation When a man truly prays - ~~he~~ ^{he offers an act of self-sacrifice} acknowledging his faith in a Supreme Goodness, and Justice.

in a world in which the good will ultimately triumph, in which the wise man plays a purposeful and creative role, in which ideals are real and efforts & spiritual efforts not in vain — whose will to mortal eyes of man, could not be ~~seen~~, ^{Prayer, its} mother ^{the} only Jesus find ready to be athened to the infant to be cut ^{God & thy's because} over it.

Paler and steadfast spirit of the bereaved. ^{laying} The soul's wish to be saved from the ~~foolish~~ ^{but it is} man, from the temptation which would drag it into the mire, from the chains of habit and civilization which hold it captive in this lower world. When a man prays with ^{all} his heart with exultation and fervor - joyously and eagerly, these chains fall ^{of} themselves, fall away, all man is freed free from a righteous consciousness with all that is best and noblest in his soul - ^{Rejoice} ~~Rejoice~~ Pray make us cut ^{out} with ^{your} ~~over~~ ^{best} ~~water~~. And as Rejoice water we cut ^{out} with our robes!

AMERICAN JEWISH THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Rep. matter or at all with me and the third way of ~~that~~ ^{as regards} that is the third way go together 9. Last partly pp 33. A great Chari ^{the people} & Heart to it Resiliences on the unusual ~~cooperation~~ are the basis of common dependence and the consciousness of common interests True charity is based not only upon the fundamental principle that all wealth belongs to God "The earth is the Lord's ^{and the} fullness thereof" True charity deriving ^{not only} from the recog~~ition that~~ ^{not only} that all our gifts ~~are~~ all the great things life like beauty and service are gifts of God not only from the fact that all men ~~do~~ have a common humanity & are brother. True charity springs also from the recognition that we can fulfil our life's destiny & growth & development only thru the helpful cooperation of other men, & ours with their & our returnmen

cultural devt. is a matter of responsibility for take as we find. We partake as we share. Our own lives cannot be profited in isolation. It is in social life, and activity, in free exchange of thoughts and activities, in aid given and received in mutual cooperation, that our lives blossom forth & fruitfully. — Hence it may well be to aspire, the way & the way of broad helpfulness — ^{other} "Charity, then, which implies the recognition of the oneness of needs and interests, and the interdependence of all men, — makes us at one with our fellowmen. Even as prayer makes us at one with God, & life with with ourselves —

WRHS

10. And this is the meaning of Citini's work. — It seeks to reestablish the unity of man lives, to mitigate our life-experience, by pointing the way which leads to our highest destiny — the way where three roads converge — Faith (orthodox), love (orthodox) and the profanity (orthodox).

poor old man of self lessness — A ~~poor~~ ^{poor} Rabbis on ~~the~~ ^{the} Day came to a poor Rabbi and said Master I am old and feeble and I have not yet ~~supper~~ ^{supper}ed. I am afraid that God will not forgive me. And the Rabbi promptly answered. Old man, think less of yourself and more of the world. It will ^{be} enough to keep away from ^{you} ~~you~~ ^{you} for 10 ~~the~~ ^{the} 5 ~~the~~ ^{the} years hands as oleum. You must do good so that other hearts are happy. You remember your vices. It is enough. God forgets the sins ~~the~~ ^{we} we remember, even as he remembers the sins we forget. Out there in the world are men who ~~think~~ ^{think} they ~~want~~ ^{want} to ~~suffer~~ ^{suffer} suffering right and wrong. Go to them and make a ~~know~~ ^{known} ~~acquaint~~ for them by ~~your~~ ^{our} look. Without ~~you~~ ^{you} in ~~that~~ ^{that} place there is ~~a~~ ^{an} ~~common~~ great service of love —

1. There is a great prayer -
2. It is of course evident ... cast in poetic mold 3. R. Pr. Ch. avert evil decree. What evil decree?
 דתך... thistles.
4. Is this decree irrevocable? doomed to dungeon-haus @-the decree is not irrevocable... handicap... bundles load - How? what forces?
 (b) As we aspire to be true to ourselves (דרכם).
5. The Power is the power of aspiration. However heavy the odds
 (a) of course we are not gods - Wise & Earnest 6. And as we aspire, our very wrathlessness may become our strength
 (a) a perfect world would be for man - Sin - 7. Our prayer indicates that the decree can ... and also indicates these-fold ~~ways~~ ^{ways} of aspiration.
 1. בָּרְכָה - Return. - To what?
 2. Not so important - depressed, brood 3. True R. induced by sense of Honor - 4. בָּרְכָה is self-restriction. One with ourselves.
8. Second way of aspiration is חִזֶּקְעַנְתָּה (דבך)... lifting 1. Soul wishes to be free - בְּרוּךְ.
 2. Prayer makes us at-one with our God.
9. And the third way ... Chasity. בְּרַכְתָּה.
 1. True charity derives 2. Cultural Development

2. A poor old man -

3. Charity makes us one with our fellow-men.

10. This is reading of Lot's way - ~~Leviticus 14:9 Gal~~
- points way which leads to our highest destiny -
- courage -

of few

Yom Kippur (Rosh Hashanah) 1925

There is a great prayer in our liturgy recited on the afternoon of (Hebrew - see p. 1 of miss) the Day of Atonement called "We shall declare the might and the holiness of this day". The solemn and awesome Day of Atonement". The prayer in superb imagery depicts God as the great judge, who on Yom Kippur causes all souls to pass before Him, like as the shepherd causes his sheep to pass under his rod, and pronounces sentence upon them all. "How many are to pass away, and how many are to be born. Who are to perish by the sword and who by hunger. Who shall have repose and who shall be troubled. Who shall become poor and who shall become rich." The whole catalog of human weal and woe is enumerated. The judgements thus pronounced are irrevocable. But, (Hebrew - see p. 1 of miss) concludes the prayer,
"Repentance, prayer and charity avert the evil decree".

It is of course evident at the very outset, that this prayer is cast in a poetic mold. It should not be taken literally. God's eternal justice is not dispensed on one day of the year only. Every day, man is upheld by His eternal laws, and every day the process of retribution operates with unfailing certitude, in the life of man. Again, it is clear that this prayer should not be interpreted in a purely materialistic way. It has a profound spiritual implication which far transcends its apparent surface meaning.

Repentance, prayer and charity avert the evil decree! What evil decree? Why, not only the decree of death, or affliction or physical want which may be the lot of an individual. But also, and more so, the fatal decree of finitude and limitation which was pronounced upon all mortals at the very beginning of time. From its very origin the race of man is enmeshed in sin and ~~XXXX~~ ~~XXXXXX~~"caught up in the corrupted currents of existence". Imperfection is inherent in his very nature. Physically man is full of infirmities and maladjustments which bring disease and death to his door. Mentally he is circum-scribed by his narrow experience and by his faulty senses and engulfed in vast ignorance. And morally he is the constant victim of overpowering passions and the sharpest appetites. Man began his career in the jungle and the jungle instincts and tendencies are his today. This is the "primeval curse", the ancient doom of man. Even those who believe that man began his career in some earthly paradise will recall that even in that primeval paradise there already lurked the dark and wily serpent of sin which proved man's undoing. This is the fate which hangs over ~~XXXXX~~ man like a pall. It is involved in his very humanity. Man was not created seraph or angel, but man, , of earth and blood - cold inert earth and hot raging blood. When the earth was still forming, say the rabbis, it produced thorns. There is no vineyard without thorns. There is no garden without weeds. There is no life without sin.

Typhoid

Is the decree irrevocable? Is man doomed to the dungeon-house of his jungle instincts, his turpitude and his blindness. Can man never rise above his limitations, to a freer and fuller life? Our prayer gives the unequivocal reply; it also points the way. But repentance, prayer and charity avert the evil decree. The decree is not irrevocable. The initial handicap of man is not fatal. Man can overleap the hurdles which destiny has placed in his way. His load is heavy, but the race can be run to victory. But How? How? What power is there that can break the hold of the sinister forces upon man? The power is the power of aspiration, and the way is the way of Repentance, prayer and charity.

As you aspire to be true to yourself, which is ~~Hebrew see p. 2 of mss~~, and true to your neighbor, which is ~~Hebrew see p. 2 of mss~~, and true to your God, which is ~~Hebrew see p. 2 of mss~~, do you avert the tragic decree of your finitude - and moral inadequacy. The power is the power of aspiration! However heavy the odds against us, however seemingly insurmountable the inherent obstacles our ~~XXXXX~~ duty is plain. We must strive to surmount them! Our task is clear: through our finite lives to strive to reach infinity. Into this sorry makeshift of our mortal frame to fit the ideal. We are not gods and yet it is ~~in~~ our divine duty and privilege to express infinite beauty through such pitifully inadequate tools of paint and brush, of chisel and stone, through a piece of wood and a few taut strings stretched over it! We are not gods, omnipotent, and yet it is our heroic task to express infinite goodness through commonplace acts and relationships and infinite justice through the daily humdrums of trade and occupation. Our wings may be the wax wings of Icarus, but like him we must soar to the skies even if they betray us when we near the goal, and hurl us to our doom!

The power which frees man is the power of aspiration. Our very weakness, is in a sense our strength, our frustrations are our opportunities. Were we all-powerful, our achievements would bring with them no satisfaction. One is never proud of having vanquished a child or of having outwitted a blind man. The strength of our opponent lends relish to our victory, even though it would be renders it difficult and often impossible. A perfect world for man a useless world. The presence of sin, for example, in the world, imminent and real, always crouching at the door, dangerous and powerful, ready to attack the strongest and the best of us, keeps men morally alert, just as the presence of the enemy keeps the soldier vigilant and fit; and it is this moral guardedness, this ethical self-discipline in the face of a relentless foe, which constitute the whole glorious epic of human life.

Our prayer promises us that the fateful sentence can be annulled through persistent aspiration and it also indicates the three-fold manner of this aspiration. (Hebrew - see p 4 of mss) (Aramaic - see p 4 of mss) - Repentance! What is ? It means return. Return to what? To our ideal self. We have all of us intimations of what we ought to be, of what we would like to be. Every man carries in his heart a picture of himself as he would wish himself to be, one of which he would be proud, his higher self. Himself - freed from those taints and blemishes which are the results of our common frailties. That is man's true self, and man's beckoning goal! The imaginary picture of ourselves is the lodestar of our lives - it attracts us, and moves us forward and upward. It is the moral magnetic pull. Every sin which he commits is a departure from that ideal, a turning aside, a backsliding, a throwback to the jungle-life. (Hebrew-see p 4 of ms) is, therefore, the art of forcing oneself to return to his ideal self - to be true to the God in him.

In the act of true repentance it is therefore not so important that a man should be terribly depressed over his misdeeds, that he should brood over his offenses, and afflict himself. It is all-important that he should make the determined effort to set himself right with himself, to correct the whole course of his life by the compass of his own ideal, to establish a new contact between himself and the advancing ideal of himself from which he had been deserted. True repentance is induced by a sense of honor, Give me the man who has a high enough conception of himself, and of his place in society, and in the universe, who is proud of his gifts and talent and manhood and of his destiny and I will show you a man who more than any other will keep himself free from sin and wickedness. He will not stoop to sin, for sin is to him a degradation, a lowering of self, a cheapening of self. He will refrain from wrong not because he is afraid of punishment, human or divine, but because he will besmirch himself in his own eyes, He will lose his self-pride which is man's dearest possession. (Hebrew-see p 5 of ms) is therefore, self-restoration - it makes us one with ourselves.

The second way of aspiration is the way of Faith - (Hebrew-see p 5 of ms). Prayer is the lifting of our souls to the point of highest ascent - God. (Hebrew-see p 5 of ms)

The mechanical prayer of petitioning is bad, which never ascends. "Words without thoughts never to heaven go". When a man truly prays, he performs an act of self-translation, acknowledging his faith in THE a supreme goodness, and justice. His soul makes the gesture and resolves to be attuned to the infinite soul of this universe, to be at one with the calm and steadfast spirit hovering over it. Prayer is the soul's wish to be saved from the sin in its path, from the chains of evil habit and inclination which hold it captive in this lower world. When a man prays with ^(Hebrew- see p. 6 of mss), with exaltation and fervor, joyously and eagerly, these chains, of themselves, fall away; man is free; free for a rapturous communion with all that is best and noblest in his world. Prayer makes us at one with our God even as repentance makes us at one with ourselves!

(Hebrew- see p. 6 of mss)

(Hebrew- see p. 6 of mss)

And the third way of aspiration is ^(Hebrew- see p. 6 of mss). Charity. I prefer to hear and cite it kindness or mutual helpfulness on the basis of common interests. True charity is based not only upon the fundamental principle that all wealth belongs to God. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof".

not only

True charity derives from the realization that all the great things of life like beauty and genius are gifts of God. Not only from the thought that all men suffer a common humanity and are therefore brothers. True charity springs also from the recognition that we can fulfill our life's destiny of growth and development only through the helpful cooperation of other men, of our neighbors, of our fellowmen. Cultural development is a matter of reciprocity. We take as we give. We partake as we share. Our own lives cannot be perfected in isolation. It is in social life and Rabb. activity, and free exchange of doubts and certitudes, in aid given and received, in mutual inspiration, that our lives blossom forth to fruition. Hence if man wishes to aspire, the way is the way of broad helpfulness, of selflessness - a pious old man on Atonement

Day came to a famous rabbi and said: Master, I am old and grey, and I have not yet sufficiently repented. I am afraid that God will not forgive me. And the rabbi promptly answered: Old man, think less of yourself and more of the world. It is not enough to keep away from evil, so that your own hands are clean. You must pursue the good, so that other hearts are happy. You remember your sins. It is enough. God forgets the sins we remember, even as He remembers the sins we forget. Out there in the great world are men who because of their want and misery and suffering cannot distinguish between right and wrong. Go to them, and make atonement for them. Wipe out your ~~your~~ sin out there in the great service of love. True charity, then, which implies the recognition of the confraternity of needs and interests, and the interdependence of all men, makes us at one with our fellow men, even as prayer makes us at one with God, and repentance with ourselves.

re-

And this is the meaning of Atonement. It seeks to establish the unity of our lives, to integrate our spiritual existence by pointing the way which leads to our highest destiny - the way where ~~the~~ three roads converge -

(Hebreg - see p. 74f mss)

Faith , love and () honor .

