

Abba Hillel Silver Collection Digitization Project

Featuring collections from the Western Reserve Historical Society and
The Jacob Rader Marcus Center of the American Jewish Archives

MS-4787: Abba Hillel Silver Papers, 1902-1989.

Series V: Writings, 1909-1963, undated.

Reel
171

Box
62

Folder
18

The Am Ha Arez in Soferic and Tannaitic times, 1915.

THE AM HA AREZ IN SOFERIC AND TANNAITIC TIMES.

Part One

The Am ha Arez in Soferic Times

- I The Name Am ha Arez.
- II The Am ha Arez ~~of~~ the Persian Period.
- III The Am ha Arez of the Greek Period.

Part Two

The Chaberim.

Part Three

The Am ha Arez in the Period of the Tannaim.

- I The Am ha Arez and the Chaber
- ~~II The Am ha Arez and the Chacham~~
- III The Am ha Arez and Teruma
- IV The Am ha Arez and the Tithes.
- V The Talmid Chacham and the Am ha Arez
- VI The Reciprocal Attitudes of the Talmid Chacham and the Am ha Arez.
- VII The Publican as an Am ha Arez.
- VIII The Judeo-Christian Am ha Arez.
- IX The Am ha Arez in the New Testament

THE AM HA AREZ IN SOFERIC AND TANNAITIC TIMES

Foreword

Between the first occurrence of the term Am Ha Arez in the J and E documents, as applied to the Jewish nation collectively, and its ultimate appearance with Hillel as a proper noun used singularly a period of over eight centuries intervenes. That words may vary and change in meaning and significance is philologically axiomatic, and that this word in particular has shed and assumed different connotations during the long process of development needs no great demonstration. The very fact that a term which was originally applied to the whole nation as a collective body had come, in due time, to designate only a specific part of that people is in itself the clearest proof of the evanescence in the meanings of the word. How this term had, from time to time, assumed new or additional significations and the conditions which influenced the development of the term are the subjects of this monogram.

We shall, however, confine the scope of our research to the periods of the Soferim and the Tannaim (c444 B.C. - 220 A.D.), thereby excluding from our consideration those Biblical writings which antedated the time of Ezra.

The Am ha Arez in the Period of the Soferim
In THE NAME AM ha AREZ.

In the post-exilic writings the term Am ha Arez, when applied to the Jewish people, no longer has the meaning which it often had in the pre-exilic writings as that of "nation" or of the "whole people"¹. Am ha Arez is now the appellation of the untitled non-professional laymen as contrasted with the priests and nobles.² This distinction is already found in pre-exilic writings³ but it is restricted almost exclusively to this sense in post-exilic works.⁴

1 Ex. V 5

2 Ezek. VII 27, XII 19, XXII 29, XLV 22, XLVI 3,9.

Lev IV 27.

3 Jer. I 18, XXXIV 19.

4 It is not in the province of our investigation to discuss in full Sulzberger's interesting booklet on the subject of the pre-exilic Am ha Arez, for his conclusions do not at all affect the course of our procedure. A critical study of the work reveals many points of weakness in the construction of his theory. It is not our purpose here to point these out for we are interested primarily in the post-exilic Am ha Arez. Since we have however taken exception to the author's opinion in interpreting the Am ha Arez of Lev IV 27 יְהוָה נִזְבֵּחַ בְּכָל־עַמּוֹת לְפָנָיו וְאֶת־עַמּוֹת to mean an untitled layman and not a member of a Parliamentary body, we would give our reasons for it. In appropriating the term Am ha Arez for a member of a judicial or legislative body the real יְהוָה נִזְבֵּחַ, the people of the land, the common people, are unaccounted for. What is the sacrifice which a common man must bring if he commits a sin through ignorance? If the author of Lev. IV 27, writing after the exile, knew of the existence of

The connecting link between this Am ha Arez and the Am ha Arez of the Tannaitic period which designated an individual of a well defined class is difficult to discover. The Biblical authors of the Soferic period betray no knowledge of the existence of a distinct class of Jews, the individual member of which is known as an Am ha Arez. The sources, then, are very meager and we are consequently forced to historical rather than textual data for the solution of our problem. Using these historical evidences as a starting point, attempts have been made to account for the peculiar signification which the word assumed in course of time and, if possible, to determine the exact point of transition.

The most familiar explanation forwarded by scholars is that which identifies the Am ha Arez with the "Landvolk", the rural inhabitants⁵. Our English "pagan" and "heathen" are close parallels, in the manner of their development, to the Am ha Arez. This class inaccessible as it was, by virtue of ^{its position to the influences of} the religious schools and teachers whose activities were limited mainly to the larger communities, gradually grew lax in the religious discipline and ignorant of the Law. This would naturally lead the religious teachers to discriminate against this class in defining the religious and formal relations between men. Once the Am ha Arez had gained this significance, the term would a Hebrew Parliament composed of representatives from the people and took care to decree special laws for that body, why do we not find any trace of such a body in the books of Nehemiah and Ezra, and why do we not hear of any attempts made to reorganize it?

5 J.E. Am ha Arez, vol.I; Hastings E.R.E. Am ha Arez vol. I; Graetz: Jost, and others.

~~also~~ come to include Jews of other classes of society, whose religious attitude was similar to that of the Am ha Arez. The Am ha Arez then, in the period of the Soferim, gradually crystallized into a distinct class of Jews distinguished by its religious laxity and by its ignorance of the law. The enactment of discriminatory legislation against this class necessitated the use of the term Am ha Arez for a single member of the class, and רַבְנָן like the term שִׁירֵי־עַזְבָּן was coined to meet requirements.

The one serious objection to this theory was that the Am ha Arez is employed nowhere to designate the agricultural or rural population in contra-distinction to the urban population. There is, however, clear evidence in the Bible to show that the term Am ha Arez was, at times, identified with the peasants and agriculturists. In the accounts given in the second book of Kings and in the book of Jeremiah⁶ of the second deportation, a distinction is clearly made between the נָזְרִים לְלֹא תַּעֲבֹד who were exiled by Nebusaradon and the נָזְרִים לְלֹא תַּעֲבֹד or rather the נָזְרִים לְלֹא תַּעֲבֹד פְּמֵן זָרִים who were permitted to remain to be vinedressers and husbandmen.

The יְמִינָה וְמִלְחָמָה must then have represented a class of people who were not included under the general class of מַעֲנָה מִלְחָמָה. The second verse describes this class as composed of vintagers and husbandmen⁹.

⁶ II Kings XXV 11, 12; Jer. LII 15, 16.

7 In the account of the first exile (597 B.C.) in II Kings XXIV 14
יְהוָה אֶסְפֵּחַ is expressly used.

8 Jer LII 15, 16.

9 Sulzberger, of course, fails to account for this. While he explains the parallel account of the second deportation given in Jer.XXXIX 9,10

That this class was looked upon with contempt and was considered as forming the lowest stratum of society is further borne out by Biblical sources. In denouncing King Jeroboam for setting up idols in Dan and Beth'el and for appointing as priests those who were not of the sons of Levi, the author of Kings takes occasion to say וְיַעֲזֶב

10 וְעָשֵׂה בְּמִתְבָּרְגָּד וְעָשֵׂה כְּחַנִּים מִקְצָוֹת הַפָּרָשׁ אֶת בֵּית בְּמִתְבָּרְגָּד

This thought is further elaborated in the following chapter וְיַעֲזֶב

11 וְעָשֵׂה מִקְצָוֹת וְעָשֵׂה כְּהַנִּים בְּמִתְבָּרְגָּד יְאָלֵא אֶת יְהִי כְּהַנִּים בְּמִתְבָּרְגָּד .
The מִקְצָוֹת are here evidently the lowest of the people.¹²

The different phraseology which the Chronicler three centuries later, uses in narrating the same incident, gives us a clue to the historical development of the Am ha Arez, and incidentally to his social position.

דְּנָא חַדְחָתָה אֶל כְּהַנִּים וְאֶל בְּנֵי אֶחָד וְאֶל בְּנֵי אֶחָד כִּמְכֹהוּמִים כְּפָנֵי הָאָרֶץ כִּי הָבָא

13. לְאָלֵא יְהִי בְּפִיכָּן בְּזָר אֶלְילָמִים אֶל בְּפִיכָּן / הַיְהָ כְּהַנִּים אֶל הַיְהָם סְפָמִים זְאַרְצָה כְּפָנֵי הָאָרֶץ / הַיְהָ כְּפָנֵי הָאָרֶץ .
The words סְפָמִים זְאַרְצָה should be amended to read either זְאַרְצָה כְּפָנֵי הָאָרֶץ or זְאַרְצָה כְּפָנֵי הָאָרֶץ . The Septuagint correctly reads καὶ ἐπολημότε ἐλυτῶς ἐρεπῖς ἐκ τοῦ λαοῦ τῆς γῆς πόλεις .

By saying that "having made way with the Elim or magnates of the Am ha Arez, he invited the Dallim (the poor members) with the powers of that body and gave them vineyards and fields (which doubtless had belonged to the patrician section) P. 34, he loses sight of the fact that in Jer. LII 15, 16, it is expressly stated that even the נְזָרִים were deported.

10 I K. XII 31.

11 ibid XIII 33.

12 נְזָרִים and נְזָרִים often have this significance. Commenting on "בְּקָרְבָּן הַמְּלָכָה - בְּקָרְבָּן הַמְּלָכָה" Num XI 1 Rashi remarks בְּקָרְבָּן הַמְּלָכָה - בְּקָרְבָּן הַמְּלָכָה שְׁבָהָם לְשִׁלְוחָם אֶל כָּל כָּל

13 IICh. XIII 9.

The term Am ha Arez is here used synonymous with בָּנֵי־עֲזֵז and evidently refers to a distinct class which was politically or socially inferior to the rest of the people, on the very lowest rung of the social ladder.

The term Am ha Arez had as yet no religious significance; that is to say, the Am ha Arez was so designated not because of his religious laxity or ignorance of the Law. It was not until the time of Ezra, during the great religious revival, that the term Am ha Arez began to have a religious implication and became the nomenclature of a class distinguished by its attitude towards matters of religion. The returned exiles had been purged in the crucible of suffering and had entered their beloved land determined never to swerve again from the path of religious piety. The precarious position in which the small community of Jews found itself immediately following the return and the imminent dangers which threatened the purity of their faith called forth a body of men, zealous and ardent enthusiasts whose first concern was complete segregation from the gentile neighbors and half-Jews and the establishment of the sovereignty of the Law of God. In their intense zeal and ardor these patriots and religious zealots treated the less enthusiastic, the indifferent and the non-observant with contempt and applied to them the opprobrious epithet of זָנוֹן as the term which had come to imply social inferiority and to some extent moral degeneration ^{AMERICAN JEWISH LIBRARY} ¹⁴.

14 The term Am ha Arez in its various stages of development which we have enumerated, viz. - (a) The people of the land - the nation. (b) The untitled laymen as distinguished from the King, nobles, and priests. (c) The lowest of the people, and (d) The religiously lax and the non-observant, can be duplicated by the Greek word όξεος. Like זָנוֹן it was originally used in the sense of a nation, a people. In translating בָּנֵי־עֲזֵז / Jer. XLVIII 42 the Septuagint reads ἀπολεῖται Μωάβ ἡπό ὄχλου. ὄχλος is again used to translate בָּשָׂר in ^{רְאֵבֶן / יְהִוָּה יְהִי שָׁמָן} וְבָשָׂר אֲשֶׁר נָאכַת יְהִי מִצְרָיִם. ἐπὶ τὸν ὄχλον Jer XXXVIII 1 (we use Biblical references on purpose). The word gradually degenerates and shades off into the meaning of common people in contrast to the titled class or priests. When the author of the first Book of Esdras states ὁ γέροντας ὅτι (οὐ) σαλπίζων μέγα he clearly refers to the γέρανον the common people in contra-distinction to the priests, Levites, chiefs of families, and ancients who "had come to the building with weeping and great crying" (i Es. IV.65) (Nor does ὄχλος here mean "crowd" or "great multitude" for πλῆθος is the term used to imply this as in (i Es. IX 6) Likewise in ἐπερομένων δὲ τῶν ὄχλων (II Macc IV 40) ὄχλος is used for the common people. (πλῆθος is here again used for crowd or multitude, ibid. XXXIX 1). The lowest stage in the development of the word is reached in such statements as οἱ κακοὶ σίτοντες ὄχλον where ὄχλος refers to the socially inferior, to the unruly mob (Si XXVI 5). It is undoubtedly true that the ὄχλος of the Apocrypha when it is brought into contrast with other classes of Jews or when the discriminatory implication is especially desired almost invariably translates the Hebrew ^{רְאֵבֶן} כָּנָעַן. Geiger (Umschau p.151) correctly states that while ἑτοίμη is used in the Apocryphical writings in the sense of gentiles or οὐλή, ὄχλος almost always refers to the lowest of the people among the Jews, the Am ha Arez. It is sufficient, for the present, to note here that the "Multitude" occurring so frequently in the Gospels and forming such a striking background for the teachings of Jesus is invariably a translation of ὄχλος.

(Note)

This is the theory of the philological evolution of the term Am ha Arez. However another theory has been propounded by scholars whereby the subsequent signification of the term is a result not of a gradual development but of a particular event that occurred at a particular time. This theory coincides with the previous one inasmuch as it, too, posits the origin of the religious connotation of the term in the period of the religious reforms of Ezra and Nehemiah. It differs however, in this, that it does not recognize in the Am ha Arez prior to this period any signification other than that of "nation" or "people of the land".

When in 458 B.C. Ezra at the head of a body of returning exiles, ~~came~~ to Judea, he discovered to his great consternation that the religious life of the people in Judea was at a very low ebb. The Jews who had not been molested during the three deportations (567, 586, 582-⁹
~~and who probably formed over three-fourths~~
81 B.C.) by the King of Babylon¹⁵ of the original population of the land had, during the century of depression and suffering that followed, gradually lost hold of the higher principles of prophetic Judaism and, entertaining the conviction of their own helplessness and the suspicion of the impotency of Jahve¹⁶, had entered upon a career of assimilation with the neighboring peoples. There was no strong, sustaining influence in this hour of need to prop up their faint courage and their drooping hopes. "For them barbarism was the first danger, They had all they could do to wring a living out of the reluctant soil. The Bedouin from the East and from the South overran the country. Edom was crowd-

15 See J.E. "Captivity"

16 The remnant of Israel in Judea might well have re-echoed the plaintive confession of their unfortunate brethren in Babylon
"Dried are our bones, and lost is our hope, we are quite ~~out~~ cut off.

by the
ed upon Nabateans and pushed out into Judah. A half century later almost the whole of Judah's territory belonged to these invaders¹⁷...". Judaism in Judea was doomed; and were it not for those true souls in the exile whose faith in Jahve had never wavered but had become deeper and purer in the years of tribulations, who had flocked back in joyous bands to their beloved land when the first opportunity presented itself, the remnant of Israel in Judea would have been forever lost. With the arrival of the first band of exiles under Zerubabel (537 B.C.) a change for the better seems to have taken place. The influx of the new ideals of the returned exiles into the life of the people tended to check temporarily the process of assimilation and to draw the people back to the true worship of Jahve. Urged on by the inspiring exhortations of Haggai and Zechariah, the work of rebuilding the temple was begun (536 B.C.), and after a compulsory cessation of the work caused by the malignant libels of the "enemies of Judah" the work was resumed, and in 516 B.C. the temple was dedicated.

The influence, however, which the returned exile exerted upon the Jewish community in Judea was temporary and not lasting. The opposing physical and spiritual forces were too strong and Zerubabel was not sufficiently qualified to cope with the situation so as to make his work of enduring value¹⁸. In time, even the returned exiles themselves fell victims to the deleterious influences which they had at first so bravely resisted. The little book of Malachi is a miniature in most vivid colors of the period which succeeded the short-lived reformation under Zerubabel. The priests had neglected the service in the temple¹⁹.

17 Smith "Old Test. Hist" p 300.

18 See Rosenweig's "Das Judenth. nach dem babylon. Exile" p.51.

19 Malachi I 7. Also Neh XIII 16, 11.

The people had become indifferent to the sanctuary and had ceased to bring their tithes and offerings²⁰. The custom of intermarriage, which at all times threatened the integrity and religious individuality of the Jewish people, had again been introduced²¹. Spiritual depression and physical oppression alike were crushing the spirit of the people. Such was the state of affairs in Judea which confronted Ezra and the second band of returning exiles (459 B.C.)

Fully aware of the fact that religious separatism alone could ensure the preservation of the Judean community and of Judaism, Ezra uncompromisingly determined upon a vigorous course of action. "Neither the inward nor the outward religion of that time was firmly enough established to assimilate without debasement or retrogression, a large influx of elements from a lower religious plane²². The prevailing custom of intermarriage, which was the root of all evils, must be eradicated once and forever. No considerations whatsoever were allowed to interfere with the work of this zealous reformer. The mixed marriages must be annulled and complete separation from the surrounding people must be effected²³. וְאַתָּה תִּרְאֵן אֶת־עֲמָקָם הַנְּכָזֶב וְאֶת־עֲדָלָה יְשָׁרָה was the battle cry of this zealous Zadokite. The passionate threats and entreaties of Ezra were not without effect. The greater number of the people pledged themselves to the separation from their strange wives and from "uncleanness of the surrounding nations"²⁴. The separation followed²⁵. He who joined the ranks of the separatists was henceforth known as a *נָזִיר וְאֶת־עֲדָלָה יְשָׁרָה*²⁶. Those, however, who would not surrender their strange wives and clung to the customs of the heathen about them²⁷ (the ~~נָזִיר~~ were henceforth distinguished from their

20 ibid III 8

21 Ibid II 10-16 Ezra IX 1

22 Montefiore - Hibbert Lectures VI 1892.

23 Ezra X 11.

24 ibid X 15

25 Ibid X 16.

26 Ezra VI 21; IX 1; X 11 Neh IX 2; X 29

27 Ezra IX 1

brethren who had subjected themselves to the separation by the epithetical nomen of גֹּויִים, "heathen" whence in course of time developed the singular form גֹּוי. As a rule "Am ha Arez" was hence forth used to denote Jews only while גֹּוי was reserved for gentiles and heathens²⁶. Out of the term גֹּוי developed the singular גְּוֵי. Whatever explanation of the term we accept, whether the philological development theory or that of being a derivative from
- "heathens", we must bear this fact in mind that the term Am ha Arez was not at all restricted subsequent to the time of Ezra, as scholars would have us think, to the Landvolk or agricultural class, but that it was applied promiscuously to people of all classes of society who would not separate themselves from the customs and uncleanness of the heathens²⁸
For a proper appreciation of the status of the latter-day Am ha Arez this fact is of utmost importance.

Ezra was assisted in his work of reform by the resolute Nehemiah.
The law was enforced. The profanation of the Sabbath was stopt²⁹. The obxervance of the festivals and of the sabbatical year was insisted upon.³⁰

26 וְנַחֲרֵשׁ יְמִינָה שֶׁבְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּשִׁירָיו וְבְּמִזְבֵּחַ הַאֲרֵץ אֲלֵיכֶם כִּי־כֵן כִּי־כֵן
קִיָּמָה עַל הַיּוֹם תִּהְיֶה "עַמּוֹ קָרֵץ" אֲלֵיכֶם זְדֻבָּךְ
בְּנֵי שְׁכָנָתְךָ שְׁכָנָתְךָ וְלֹא־תִּזְרַע אֲשֶׁר־כֵן קִיָּמָה קִיָּמָה בְּנֵי שְׁכָנָתְךָ Jawitz vol III p.151.

and especially Geiger's "Urshrift" p. 151; Weiss לְהַלְלוּ אֶלְעָשֵׂר vol.I Ch.13; Schürer "Ges.Jüd. Volk. im za.Jesu II p 400 note 54.

28 "From this time (of Nehemiah) the stricter Jews began to regard their adversaries as the "people of the land" against which their earlier lawgivers warned them".

Smith "O.T. Hist." p. 389.

29. Neh. XIII 15, See also Is. LVI 4 ff LVIII 13.

30 Ez. VI 19; Ne. VIII 14; Zec XIV 16; Ne. X 32.

Proper Temple services were reinstated³¹. The priests who could not produce their credentials entitling them to the priesthood were disqualified.³² The priests and Levites purified themselves.³³ The laws of tithing and the offering of the first fruits and the first-born and many other laws were subscribed to by the majority of the people³⁴. As a result of this religious revival and the insistence upon the strict observance of the Law and upon the purity of blood the separation between the conformists and the ~~YOKHIDIM~~³⁵ became even more pronounced.

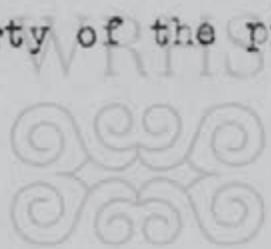

31 Ne. XIII

32 Ez. II 62. Ne. VII 64.

33 Ne. XII 30, XIII 22

34 Ne X 33 ff. XIII 12

35 The Samaritan schism is a product of this same restrictive tendency of the party of the pious.

II. The Persian Period (539 - 333)

Mr. Kennet adequately expresses the religious status of the post-exilic Israelitish community in the following statement. "The isolation of the Jews of Judea during the period (i.e. from the time of the publication of the law by Nehemiah to the conquest of Canaan by Alexander) tended to confirm the nation in those peculiar observances which have made it to this day a people apart, Nehemiah's quarrel with the Samaritans produced for his people a sort of ghetto-like isolation in which the shell of Judaism hardened sufficiently to enable the Church finally to issue unscathed from the dangers of Hellenism"³⁶. The marked tendency of the Persian Period was towards legalism, separation and greater rigorism in the observance of the Law. It is quite natural to expect that the circle of strict conformists would narrow proportionally to the insistence upon the stricter observance of a greater number of Laws. Thus while the number of those who could be called the strictly conforming Jews would gradually decrease, the number of those who could^{not} or would not live up to the standard set by the strictly pious, would continually increase. As a result the Am ha Arez, who during the age of Ezra and Nehemiah was probably the exception and composed but a small fraction of the whole people now gradually began to include an ever greater proportion of Jews and as the laws which distinguished the strict~~ly~~ conformant from the Am ha Arez increased he grew to be the rude.

36 Robert Hatch Kennet "Hist. of the Jew. Church from Nebuchadnezzar to Alexander the Great" -- Cambridge Biblical Essays 1909.

We shall soon reach the time when the members of the strictly pious Jews had, comparatively speaking become so small a minority that it no longer represented the great majority of the people but had deteriorated to the position of a sect or a party which was looked upon by the great majority of the people - the Y'K"R 'b's as a sect of separatists or ultra-pious.

III THE GREEK PERIOD(333-165.)

"The aggressive power of the Greek art and literature implied aggressime power also in Greek religion.³⁷ The great majority of the people, either attracted to the alien civilization by the new elements of thought and the new outlook on life which it offered, or desiring to escape the various confines of ~~legalistic~~ Judaism, fell an easy prey to it. In the eagerness to become completely Hellenized the party of Hellenizers did not pause to sift and examine the elements of this newer culture so as to appropriate for themselves what was good in it and what was worthy of assimilating but voraciously absorbed it, dregs and all. The corruptive influences were soon at work and their dire consequences were becoming apparent.

Greater rigorism was the only antidote to the unrestrained license. The growing laxity on the one hand called forth a corresponding rigorism on the other. The tendency towards separatism and particularism which marked so characteristically the Persian period was even more accentuated during the Greek.

The representatives of this opposition ~~against~~ to the spread of paganism, and the exponents of the supreme authority of the Law were already looked upon as a distinct sect - the chassidim³⁸ ~~who were~~ which was soon to crystallize into the party of the Pharisees. The strictly religious party among the Jews ~~who were~~ which was amplifying the Law and were "building up hedges" about it encountered not only the passive resistance but also the active opposition of the aristocracy and the priestly hierarchy.

37 Smith O.T. Hist. p. 418 See also Geiger Judaism and its History.

38 οἱ Ἀσκέται I Macc II 42; VII, 12 ff.

The Am ha Ares, then, of this period included all those who were not included in the circle of Chassidim, that is to say, all who did not pledge their allegiance to the Law as developed and interpreted traditionally by the religious teachers of conservative Judaism.³⁹

39 So far we are in full accord with Chwolson (Beiträge zur Entwicklungsgeschichte des Judenthums, p. 1-55). The Sadducees were undoubtedly looked upon by the Pharisees as נַזְרִיר 'בָּי. It mattered little to the Pharisees whether one disobeyed the laws of their religious teachers on principle or through mere neglect and indifference as regards religious matters, both alike were considered נַזְרִיר 'בָּי. But in describing all נַזְרִיר 'בָּי as Sadducees (p. 9) and in consequently protracting the political and religious struggles of the Pharisees and the Sadducees more than three centuries after the destruction of the temple we must take issue with him. This statement is made in the face of a mass of contradicting evidence. All נַזְרִיר 'בָּי were not Sadducees. Chwolson arrives at his conclusion by a process of elimination which does not eliminate. "The Am ha Ares", he argues, "was evidently, one who did not accept the Pharisaic or Rabbinic precepts. What religious dicta did he then follow? He must have followed some. He certainly could not have been an Essene. He must therefore have been a Sadducee - tertium non datur". (p. 9,10) But there is another alternative. Chwolson loses sight completely of the fact that there existed along side of the Pharisees and Sadducees and Essenes the great mass of the people who were neither Pharisees nor Sadducees.

(Footnote) - - - - -

nor Essenes but simply Jews. As against the Sadducees, these fully recognized the Pharisaic teachers as their authoritative law-givers, but the circumstances of their daily life prevented them from living up to the standard set and required by those strict teachers and in consequence of this they were considered by the latter as Y&NIT 'BS. In prolonging the struggle between the Sadducees and Pharisees into the third or fourth century of our Era, Chwolson is of course working on hypotheses and is contradicted by historical facts. The destruction of the temple practically sounded the death-knell of Sadducaism not only as a political governing force but also as a principle of religious control. Faint echoes of Sadducaic principles are heard centuries later in Karaistic teachings but during the centuries immediately following the great national disaster, Phariseism was more than ever the predominating force in the religious life of the people. If Sadducaism existed at all in the second and third centuries of the common Era it was too impotent and of too little consequence to provoke the strenuous opposition and bitter animosity of the teachers which we find directed at the Y&NIT BS. Such enmity between Sadducees and Pharisees could be accounted for when met with in the turbulent time of John Hyrcan I or Alexander Jannaeus, but when, after a century, during which no references whatsoever are made to any such hostilities we meet with them ⁱⁿ with R. Akiba, R. Meir, and others they are simply inexplicable (Chwolson attempts an explanation which on the face of it is impossible, see ibid p.48). And finally this conception of the Am ha Arez as we shall see (Ch. III) does not at all tally with Talmudic data.

Am ha Arez was one who could not say with the psalmist of that period⁴⁰ חֲבָר אֶנְיָה לְכָל אֲשֶׁר יַזְאֵק וְלִשְׁמֵרִי פְּקוֹדִים.

With the growing exclusiveness of the pious and the corresponding decrease in their numbers, the schism between the Am ha Arez and the strict conformists⁴¹ the Chassid was widening. To insure the correct observance of all laws, ritualistic and otherwise in face of the growing laxity of the times the Chassid soon developed into a Parush⁴¹ and began to restrict the movements of his religious life to a sphere composed exclusively of ~~his co-religionists~~, whose religious attitude tallied with his.

40- Ps. 119,63 The use of the term חֲבָר in this psalm is significant.

41- Attempts have been made to trace the rise of the Pharisean party back to the time of Ezra. The נְבָלִים spoken of in the books of Ezra and Nehemiah are said to be the Pharisees (פְּרוֹשׁ is the Aramaic for נְבָל). Weiss (דָּרְבָּר דָּרְבָּר אֶחָד, vol 1 Ch.13) concurs with this theory. Jawitz (סִירָעָתָן דָּבָר אֶחָד, vol III סִירָעָתָן דָּבָר VII) bravely champions this view and analyses in detail the scriptural references to נְבָלִים to uphold his theory. Notwithstanding the striking similarity between the term נְבָל used in the text and the latter day פְּרוֹשׁ we are forced, upon close examination, to regard this as a mere coincidence. We have no historical data to justify us in tracing back the birth of the Pharisees farther than the Greek period (about the latter half of the third or the earlier half of the second century B.C.)

----- (Foot note) -----

Wellhausen (Phariseer und Sadducäer p. 76 et seq.) fully grasps the situation when he states that the "Separatism recorded in Ezra, to which most of Israel then submitted, had about it nothing characteristic of the Pharisees. For the Pharisees must have their name from a separation which the bulk of the nation did not undergo with them; in other words, from a separation made by them in consequence of their view of the notion of uncleanness, not only from the uncleanness of the heathen but also from that which, according to their view, a great portion of the people were effected!" (Given in Schürer, Eng. II Division p.20.)

IV FROM THE MACCABEAN WARS TO THE DESTRUCTION OF THE TEMPLE.
(165 B.C. to 70 A.D.)

The Hellenistic persecutions under Antiochus and the subsequent Maccabean wars threw the control ~~over~~ the political and religious life of the people into the hands of the conservative anti-Hellenic party. "The Maccabean revolt drove out Hellenism and prepared the way for the full development of Rabbinism. It left the Law triumphant and supreme".⁴² The struggle between the נָבִיא וְרֵבֶבֶת מִשְׁנֵה וְמִשְׁנֵה and the רַבִּים וְנָבִיא ended in a great victory for the latter. (Dan XI, 32, 33) Their great point of contention in the pre-Maccabean period - that foreign cultures endangered the interests of the national religion - had been established. No wonder then that the Chassidim were encouraged in their policy of religious exclusiveness. This work was carried on even with greater zest after the Maccabean revolt. The line of demarcation between the truly pious Jew and the גּוֹי וְנָבִיא was most clearly drawn. To be counted among the true Jews, they held, was to submit unconditionally to the sovereignty of the Law as interpreted by the religious teachers. This restrictive policy soon transformed the Chassidim into the Pharisees; for it must be remembered that the people at large could not and did not comply with their ever-increasing legalistic minutiae. The distance that separated them from the גּוֹי וְנָבִיא became ever greater.⁴³

42- Montefiore (Hibbert Lectures VII p.412)

43- Schürer exhibits his usual brilliancy in accounting for this transformation of the Chassidim into רַבִּים וְנָבִיא. "Die gegetzesstreng Richtung der 'Chasidäer' לְמִקְדָּשׁ gewann mehr und mehr

The struggle of the Sadducees in the following century against the acceptance of Pharisaic principles as tenets of authoritative Judaism was an unsuccessful one. Although they succeeded to remain in control of the political affairs of the state even after the fall of the Hasmonean Dynasty and the office of the High Priest was still restricted to them, they were slowly loosing ground.

We are now approaching the period of the Tannaim, a period which offers us far greater assistance in the pursuance of our subject. Let us, however, pause here a moment and reflect upon the attitude of the Am ha Arez of this period to the Chassid or Parush.

Great as the schism between the Chassid and the Am ha Arez may have been at this time we find ^{as yet no} traces of hostility exhibited on either or both sides. The attitude of the Am ha Arez as a whole towards the Chassidim and Perushim was one of deepest regard and veneration. The Chassidim and Perushim were looked upon by the Am ha Arez as the true representative and qualified teachers of authoritative Judaism. The very fact of the inability or even unwillingness of the Am ha Arez to comply with stricter religious regulations caused him to revere and admire his brother who, notwithstanding the many inconveniences involved in stricter religious observances, would gladly submit himself to them that he may, by means of them, attain to a higher and purer worship mehr an Einfluss. Und damit steigerten sich auch ihre Ausprüche...

Es scheint also gerade der religiöse Aufschwung der makkabäischen Zeit zu einer festeren Consolidierung der Parteien geführt zu haben. Die Chasidaer zogen die Consequenzen ihres Principles und wurden zu Phariseen. (Gesch. Judisch. Volk im Zeit Jesu II 417.)

of the God of Israel.

"The Pharisees have the multitude(πλῆθος), as their co-adjudicators⁴⁴" writes Josephus on one occasion. On another occasion he speaks of the Phatisees as men "who are able greatly to persuade the body of the people, and whatsoever they do about divine worship, prayers, and sacrifices, they perform them according to their directions; insomuch that the cities gave great attestations to them on account of their entire virtuous conduct, both in the actions of their lives and their discourses also⁴⁵". "The Sadducees," continues Josephus, "are unwillingly obliged to addict themselves to the notions of the Pharisees, because "the multitude would not otherwise bear them"⁴⁶.

The Pharisee would naturally reciprocate this sentiment. Though at times he would be forced, for ritualistic reasons, to be reserved and exclusive in his relations with the Am ha Arez, he would nevertheless look upon him as a brother, an erring brother, true, but still a brother, deserving of consideration and love.

44- Antiq. XIII 10,6

45- ibid XVIII 1,3

46- ibid XVIII 1,4

PART II

THE CHABERIM

For a better appreciation of the peculiar characteristics of the Am ha Arez, of his social, political, and religious status in the period of the Tannaim, a knowledge of the Chaberim, their organization, purpose and religious dicta is essential. The Am ha Arez is, very often ~~in other writings and almost invariably~~ ^{and especially} in the Mishna and Tosefta, placed in an antithetical position to the Chaber, and the points which differentiate them are constantly insisted upon. The term "Chaber" has a variety of meanings in Talmudic writings⁴⁷, but we shall restrict our investigation to the term "Chaber" used technically in opposition to the Am ha Arez.

To determine the identity of the "Chaber" is a matter of no great ease. In fact the many views presented by scholars of note have been so conflicting as to discourage any hope of ever arriving

47- "Chaber" is used very often in Talmudic writings in the sense of a friend, neighbor, and associate (Ab. II, 9 ibid II, 10 Tosefta EK. V, 6) The term is also used to designate a fellow-student, pupil or scholar (San. 88b; Tosef Taan. IV, 12) The study of the Law in groups and companies is always urged and commended — "עכוז"

וְאֵלֶיךָ מִתְחַנֵּן בְּחֶבֶר וְאֵלֶיךָ מִתְחַנֵּן בְּחֶבֶר (Ber. 63b) When רְלָמִים רְלָמִים is used the honorary implication of colleague is added to that of pupil (Jer. Shak. III 47b: also Jer. BB. IX 17b for which the Babli B.B. 158b has רְלָמִים רְלָמִים; Ber. 27b) As a scholastic degree Chaber was inferior to that of Chacham (חכם). אַלְפִים

אַלְפִים חֲכָם, אַלְפִים חֲכָם (Kidd. 33b) Chaber is often synonymous with רְלָמִים רְלָמִים; רְלָמִים רְלָמִים (B.B. 75a)

at the truth. However, after a process of comparison and elimination and after a careful revision of these views we trust to be able to present a fairly satisfactory interpretation of the term.

The "Chaber" has been identified by some with the Essene. Frankel contends that Josephus, when writing of the Essene had the Chaberim in mind, but holding some Greek sect before him as a model he applied some of its characteristics to the Chaberim. The Essenes were none other than the extremely rigorous wing of the Pharisees, i.e. Chaberim.⁴⁸

The opinion most generally subscribed to is that "Chaber" is synonymous with "Parush" and that the Chaberim were the Pharisees. The term פָּרָשׁ says Schürer, was applied, by the people, contemptuously, to those who had banded themselves together into close associations for the purpose of fostering the tradition of the fathers and of observing more rigorously the laws of Levitical purity and of tithe offering.

This accounts for the fact that the term "Parush" is so very rarely mentioned in the Mischna. In time the Pharisees, too, came to accept this appellation as designating their party⁴⁹. The clearest evidence of this identity, according to Schürer, is found in a comparison of two Mischnaic passages

48- "Der Esäer" ist der ^{in die} Mischna und Baraita oft vorkommende פָּרָשׁ. Josephus hat, um griechische Muster anzupassen, ein starkes Colorit aufgetragen und den Essäismus in seiner Überschwänglichkeit zur Staffage genommen". Frankel - Monatsschrift 1853 p.31

פָּרָשׁ מִתְּבֵדֶל בַּמִּזְבֵּחַ (פָּרָשׁ) נִתְּבֵדֶל מִזְבֵּחַ לְפָנֵי שְׂבִעָה

וְשָׁבֵת הַמִּזְבֵּחַ - Frankel, מסמך, 157 pp.14-15.

49 - Ihre Gegner aber nannten sie die "Separatisten"... Sie nannte

המזהב מילא לחיותם חביב אירן מודה ל'ה לה'ibus איזה נתקבון
איירן מלחמת אצטדיון נסא מאחרון אצטדיון נסא בבלוילן. ^{50.}

בלוילן מילא לפלישין, בלוילן מילא לאיכל, תכנתה, בלוילן איכל, לטנטון מילא לאיכל, בלוילן איכל, קילש מילא לאיכל. ^{51.}

sich schlechtweg דיבר "Genossen"; dieser Begriff ist nämlich für den Sprachgebrauch der Mischna und überhaupt der älteren rab-binischen Literatur geradezu identisch mit dem der "peruschim"

- E. Schürer.- Gesch. des Jüdischen Volks im Ze. Jesu Chris. II p399.

So Kohler (J.E. "Pharisees") "They called their members "haberim" while they passed under the name of "Perishaya" or "Perushim".

See also Fairweather "The Background of the Gospels". P. 138

50- Demai II, 3.

51- Chagiga II, 7.

In both places the touch of the garments of the Am ha Arez is considered defiling; but in the former it is the Chaber who is defiled and in the latter it is the Parush. Schürer considers this to be sufficient evidence for establishing the identity of the Chaber and the Parush.⁵²

This is also the traditionally accepted view. So Maimonides in defining "Pharisees" says חֲבָרִים שְׁפָרִישִׁין מִמֶּנּוּן הַאֲצֵדֶקָה. Bertinoro likewise identifies the two -⁵³ כָּהֲנִים וְפָרִישִׁים. and Nathan ben Jechiel defines the Pharisees as ⁵⁴ הַחֲבָרִים הַאֲצֵדֶקִים פָרִישִׁים בְּמִשְׁמָרָה. the שָׂנֵן too — שְׁפָרִישִׁים אֲלֵיכֶם פְּשָׁעִים⁵⁵ אֲלֵיכֶם יְהוָה קָדוֹשׁ בָּרוּךְ הוּא קָדוֹשׁ וְאֶת כָּל בְּבִיאָתָךְ אֲלֵיכֶם.

Along side of this view there exists another view which although it concedes that all Chaberim were by virtue of their self-imposed restrictions, Pharisees, takes issue with the ~~view~~ ^{statement} that all Pharisees were necessarily Chaberim. Thus Weiss contends that חֲבָרִים

אֲלֵיכֶם פְּשָׁעִים אֲלֵיכֶם נְאָזְנִים אֲלֵיכֶם בְּמִשְׁמָרָה בְּמִשְׁמָרָה בְּמִשְׁמָרָה⁵⁶ פָרִישִׁים בְּמִשְׁמָרָה⁵⁷ And Mendelsohn⁵⁷ in the J.E. likewise subscribes to this view by saying that "The term Chaber is by no means synonymous with Parush since not all Pharisees were Chaberim, though sometimes the generic term וְחֶבֶר is used in its stead."

To identify the Essenes ^{with} ~~and~~ the Chaberim is impossible. The 52- So Jost-Gesh. des Juden I.

53- Demai II 3

56- לְשָׁנָה זֶה לְשָׁנָה Vol. I Ch 13

54- Aruch "Chaber"

57- J.E. "Haber"

55- וְחֶבֶר Demai II 3. The וְחֶבֶר however differentiates between a וְחֶבֶר and a מְנֻמְנָה.

points of dissimilarity e.g. the Essenean indifference to sacrifice, their celibacy, their communistic philosophy are so basic as to preclude any suggestion of identity.

To determine definitely the identity of the Chaberim let us for a moment consider the aims of the Chaburot. It should be remembered that the Chaburot, originally, had nothing to do with the proper tithing of produce. Not that the Chaberim or rather the laymen among the Chaberim disregarded the agrarian laws. On the contrary

⁵⁹⁻ תנו ריבון: הבא לך כל דברי חבירות צוין לך בפניהם שלושה
חברים ואפי' לא תירא צוין לך כל חבר בפניהם שלושה. זכה ותשבע בושובם
אליך לך בפניהם שלושה חברים שכמי לך עלי משעה ששב

Baraitha Bakhor. 30b.

Tosef, Demai. II. 13.

Jer. II 22:75.

the Chaberim whose piety induced them to submit to the most rigorous dicta of the Rabbis in regards to the laws of ritual cleanness would not think of violating the laws of Maaser and Teruma which are Biblical injunctions. But the agrarian laws were no more the causes ~~for~~^{of} the organization of the Chaburot than were the Sabbatical or dietary laws⁶⁰.

The one great principle of the Chaburot which is insisted upon throughout is the proper observance of the Laws of Levitical purity. An examination of all the references to early Chaberim and Chaburot reveals the fact that the only questions which absorbed the interests of these Chaburot were those of $\pi\chi\beta\imath\omega$ and $\pi\gamma\pi\imath\omega$. The three references to the $\pi\chi\beta\imath\omega$ in Demai II 3, Tosef. Demai III 2, and Abotk di R. Nathan XLI make no mention of any regulations imposed on a "chaber" as regards the observance of the agrarian laws.

המקבץ איזו/ איבען זה מקבץ פון לאיינט חביב: איזו מוכך לאפ' לא ישב איזו זילק מונען לא יאיזו מילאיין נאש צה ועס מאון/ איזו בוכוין.

בכל היותר מכך, איזה צדקה נושא לערוך בטענה שמדובר במקרה אחד בלבד.

אוֹרָה נְאָמֵן תַּחֲזִיק וְעֶשֶׂרֶת לְכָה פָּה וְאוֹרָה עֲשֵׂה טְהוּלָה אַכְלָה כָּה אַכְלָה חַולָּין בְּשָׂחָר.

60- Those who pledged themselves to a rigid compliance ~~with~~^{to} the agrarian laws were originally known as the מִשְׁנִים, the מִשְׁנָה or simply the מִשְׁנָה. In opposition to these were the אַרְבָּה מִשְׁנִים or the מִשְׁנָה (Dem. II 2-3 ibid IV 5; Tosef. ibid V 3 ibid V 5; Dem Iv 1-25) A לְחֵזֶק was not necessarily a chaber. An interesting statement in the Mishna throws light on the relative position of the chaber and the לְחֵזֶק or מִשְׁנָה: בֵּית שָׂנָא אֲלֹרִים לֵא - מִשְׁנָה לְחֵזֶק אָמֵן אֶל דִּוְלֵי / צְנַפְּרֵי אֶל מִשְׁנָה : לְחֵזֶק אָמֵן אֶל דִּוְלֵי אֲלֹא לְחֵבֶר. אֶבוֹת הַלְּחֵזֶק אֶל מִשְׁנָה :

אָנָּשׁוֹן כְּבָדָל מִלְּגָד (Dem. VI 6) - The נָשָׂר is here in a class by himself and outside the circle of the "shaber".

61- Why a "chaber" should not give his Maaser and Teruma to a priest who is an Am haArez is evident. The Am ha Arez might render them unclean and it is a Rabbinic injunction "אֲנָשֵׁן שְׂמַח תְּהִלָּתֶךָ"

62- Büchler is perplexed over the fact that the requirement for the proper observance of the agrarian laws is not included

Wherever, in the earlier sources, the Chaber* is placed in juxtaposition ^{to} with the Am ha Arez, it is in ~~the~~ matter of ~~מִזְבֵּחַ~~ and ~~מִזְבֵּחַ~~

We must not lose sight of the fact that the highly developed laws of clean and unclean were originally incumbent upon the priests only. The layman was completely exempt from these laws except in so far as they were Scriptural ^{rites} ~~ordinations~~ incumbent upon all.

among the ^{וְרֹאשֵׁי} חֲבָרִים. He suggests a way out of this difficulty by saying that since the proper tithing of the produce is a requisite ^{for} of the ^{מִזְבֵּחַ} it is undoubtedly so for the Chaber and therefore its inclusion among the stipulations for admittance into the Chabura is superfluous (Büchler - Der. Galil. Am ha Arez p. 158 Note 3) This is altogether unnecessary. Whether an applicant for admission into the Chabura^{*} tithed his produce properly was of no more concern to the Chabura than was the question whether he wore Teffillin or Zizith or conformed ^{in kind} with ~~the~~ laws of Sabbath observance. To be sure the chaberim were observant of all other laws, for it would be preposterous to think that Pharisees who were so scrupulous in the observance of the laws of Levitical cleanliness would disregard all other laws some of which are of equal or of even greater religious importance. It is but logical to infer that men who found it necessary to add this new precaution for their religious safe-being readily complied with all the old laws that were then prevalent,

When the secular teachers, during the Hellenic period, became a body distinct from the priests, some among them voluntarily accepted the priestly prescriptions of ritual cleanliness.⁶³ With the destruction of the temple this movement among the religious teachers to attain to the degree of holiness⁶⁴ by means of the self-imposed priestly laws of ritual cleanliness received a great impulse because of the growing laxity in religious life due to the unsettled state of the country.

But Büchler's conclusion that all the laws of Levitical cleanliness so minutely elaborated in Rabbinic Literature were made for and refer exclusively to the priests and the Teruma in the period following the destruction of the Temple is erroneous⁶⁵. Apart from the fact that the relations of the chaber to the Am ha Arez in regards to the laws of ritual cleanliness were subject of discussion ~~among~~ ^{early part} with Rabbis⁶⁶ in the first half of the first century and in the schools of Shamai and Hillel,⁶⁷ by far the greater number of these

63- (See Montefiore Hibbert Lect. IX P. 275)

64- פְּשָׁתַר יְהִי נָקָד מִנְחָה (Jer. Sab. I 3 c Sot. IX 5.)

65- Dazu haben wir noch erkannt, dass das ganze Gesetz über die levitische Reinheit in den Börterungen der Tannaiten fast ausschliesslich mit den Priestern und der Priesterhebe sich befasst, weil die Ahroniden allein die levitische Reinheit zu beobachten hatten; das dagegen nicht Priester die den Priestern gleich das levitische Reinheitsgesetz beobachteten, seltene ausnahmen waren (Der Gali. Am ha Arez P. 12, also P. 85)

66 Tos. Maaser III 13, Jer. Dem IV 25c70. Tos Ab Zor. III 10 and others.

67- Dem VI 6 Tos. Shab. I 14; Tos. Dem. II 12, and others.

laws as developed in the Halacha have nothing whatsoever to do with priests or with the Teruma. The Levitical regulations affecting the cleanliness of pots and vessels as enumerated in the tract Kelim are not at all restricted to the Ahronides. Büchler realizes this and avoids the issue by a tentative remark "Dass es hierbei in Erster Reihe um die Gefäße und Geräte der Ahroniden handelt haben wir bereits gesehen"⁶⁸.

The prescription for the washing of the hands before partaking of profane food was also not a priestly predication only. Chagiga II 5 clearly states וְשָׁמַר יְהוָה אֶת־יְדֵיכֶם וְלֹא־תִּחְטֹף נָאָתָה וְלֹא־תִּשְׁחַטֵּן. Washing of the hands is here clearly indicated as a prerequisite for ~~the~~ the eating of ^{all} profane food⁶⁹. Likewise the discussion in Ber. VIII 2-4 between the schools of Shamai and Hillel as to which precedes in the order of the meal, the filling of the goblets, ~~or~~ the washing of the hands, etc., indicates the prevalent custom of hand-washing among the Pharisees⁷⁰. Those portions of the New Testament which are conceded to be products of the first century clearly bear out this fact⁷¹. R. Meir's statement מִנְחָה כְּלֵין שְׂעִיר בָּרָיֶת and the appended remark of the chanhamim בְּשֻׁר שְׂעִיר בָּרָיֶת⁷² is conclusive proof that the subjects of discussion are here not priests but laymen, for just as the laws of the tithes are applicable only to laymen so 68- Der Gal. Am ha Arez. P.91 Note.

69- Büchler's (P.116) attempt to restrict the use of כְּלֵין here to the profane food of priests is of course a mere conjecture, not at all implied in the text.

70- Here, too, Büchler (P.134) endeavors to subvert a self-evident truth by saying that the handwashing mentioned here is not a religious duty but a requisite of table etiquette. 71-Matt Xv 2 Mk Vii 3.

72- Ber. 47b; Tos. Ab. Zar. III 10.

must also R. Meir's statement refer to, ^{or} at least include, laymen.

Büchler is fully cognizant of the fact and he again avoids concise and definite conclusions by his tentative "Es ist sehr wahrscheinlich" ⁷³. But the most conclusive of all seems to be the statement in Chag, II ^{בָּנִים מְרוֹשִׁים מִזְרָחָה, בְּנֵי אֶרְזָה וְלַאֲנָזָן}, which clearly refers to laymen who obey the laws of Levitical cleanliness.⁷⁴

The chaberim were then the more exacting Pharisees who formed themselves into associations or "Chaburot" for the sole purpose of being in a position to observe more rigidly and with greater security the laws of Levitical purity. All those who did not join the Chaburot, both priests and laymen, were known as the "Ame ha Arez". The ^{attitude of the Chaberim of this period to the} Ame ha Arez we shall consider in the following chapter.

It is quite natural to suppose that the Chaburot, representing the best of the Pharisaic Judaism, would throw the weight of their prestige to the enforcement of any law which might be demanded by an altered state of affairs. This is exactly what did happen. When the laws of Maaser and Teruma were falling into disuse in the second century especially in Galilee, and stringent measures were needed to save this institution, the chaburot declared any man who did not tithe his ^{produce} fruits properly to be an Am ha Aretz and therefore excluded from the enjoyment of the privileges of their groups and subject to the boycott of the chaberim.

73- ibid P 165.

74- see Schürer- Theologische Liter. Zeit. P.619.

PART THREE.

THE AM HA AREZ IN THE PERIOD OF THE TANNAIM.

As we enter the Tannaitic period a mass of bewildering matter bearing on our subject confronts us. The Mishna, the Tosefta, the many old Baraithas scattered through the Talmud, and other Talmudic writings present an embroglie of information so conflicting as to discourage any hope of ever identifying the Tannaitic Am ha Arez and of ever determining his true position in society. No wonder then that a writer of a Tosephot, unable to harmonize the many contradictory statements on the legal status of the Am ha Arez, in order that he might escape from a conundrum, was forced to declare that there were various classes of Ame ha Arez⁷⁵. How much truth there is in his assertion, we shall realize as we proceed in our analysis of the sources.

In the previous chapter we have seen that a Talmid Chacham was not necessarily a chaber. The relations of a chaber to an Am ha Arez would then not necessarily be identical with those of a Talmid Chacham to an Am ha Arez. We must accordingly distinguish in our sources between the Am ha Arez who is brought into relation with a chaber and the Am ha Arez who is correlated with a Talmid Chacham.

Only by differentiating the two may we hope to ever attain at some systematic knowledge of the Tannaitic Am ha Arez.

We have briefly sketched in the preceding chapter the character and make-up of the "chaber". The strict observance of the laws of TKDVL and TZA'RUA was his great aim and the aim of his chevura.

75 - Tosephot Sota 22a. / תְּזִבְּחַת פְּלִיטָה יְדֵיכֶם נְבָרֶת .

In the light of this, his relation with the Am ha Arez can be fully comprehended. In the eyes of the chaber every Jew who did not obey the laws of Levitical purity in their highly developed traditional form was an Am ha Arez. An Am ha Arez to the chaber need not all be an ignorant irreligious man of a disposition inimical to him. From the fact that even a Talmid Chacham had to subscribe to the מיעוט מיעוט before he could be considered a chaber⁷⁶ we are led to infer that, if he failed to do so, he would remain outside the limits of the Chabura and even he would, accordingly, be considered by the chaber an Am ha Arez. An Am ha Arez may be a teacher of the Law to the children of a Chaber⁷⁷. The marriage of the son of a Chaber to the daughter of an Am ha Arez or vice versa is considered as a matter of common occurrence.⁷⁸ One Tosefta relates that Rabbi Gamaliel the elder married his daughter to Simeon ben Nathaniel - a priest and an Am ha Arez⁷⁹. A Chaber and an Am ha Arez, moreover, belong to the same family⁸⁰. An Am ha Arez may at will join the Chabura and the doors of the chaburot were always open to welcome him into their folds⁸¹.

The mass of highly particularized laws of ritual cleanliness which entered so considerably into the daily life of the Chaber -

76- Baraita Bechor 30b. Tosef. Demai II,3;

77- Tosef. Demai II 18. "עַל שְׂנִיר אֶל אֲלֵין כָּל מִזְרָח וְכָל מִזְרָח"

Büchler's contention that תבש does not mean here the study of the Law but the study of some art or craft (wishing to remove thereby the great argument against his theory that an Am ha Arez could not have been a scholar) is of course arbitrary and unfounded.

(SEE NEXT PAGE FOR OTHER NOTES)

(Footnotes from preceding page)

78- Tosef Demai II 5. בְּרַחֲבָר שֶׁהָיָה הַזֶּקֶן אֶל אֲבֹאוֹתָיו וְלִפְנֵי ibid II 16. בְּתַת פְּנֵי שְׁעֻשָּׂאָת לְחַבָּר, אֲשֶׁר עַד כֵּן שְׁעֻשָּׂאָת לְחַבָּר, ibid II 17. בְּתַת חַבָּר שְׁרִישָׂא תַּלְעַמְּד, אֲשֶׁר חַבָּר שְׁרִישָׂא תַּלְעַמְּד.

79- Tosef Ab. Zora III 10

80- Demai I 9. חַבָּר אֲלֵהוּ שְׁוֹכַנְתָּא אֶת אֲבוֹתָךְ פְּנֵי

81 - Ibid. Tosef Demai II 3. עַל שְׁקָרְבָּן עַל דְּבָרִים חַבָּיכֶם ..

so also Ibid. II 5

Becho. 30 b.

perforce interfered with an amicable or neighborly intercourse between the Chaber and the Am ha Arez but that this led to shyness and bitterness we have no reason to think. On the contrary we have evidences to the effect that the chaber respected the feelings of the Am ha Arez and made allowances for him. Thus, during the Passover, Pentecost, and Feast of the Tabernacles the laws which might have prevented the Am ha Arez from full participation in the ceremonies at Jerusalem were suspended⁸².

82- Chag 26a; Nid. 34a.

III. The Am ha Arez and Teruma

The safeguarding of the Teruma from all manner of uncleanness was the chief motive that actuated the enactment of that intricate system of legal preventatives. The destruction of the Temple⁸³ and the growing laxity in the safe-keeping of the ritual cleanliness of the Teruma on the part of both priests and laymen evoked still greater efforts from the religious teachers in the direction of counteracting this tendency by more stringent laws and greater precautions⁸⁴. For the Teruma to be in a state of ritual cleanliness two conditions must be fulfilled: the priest when partaking of it must himself not render it profane and the farmer when appropriating it, must likewise take precautions not to render it unclean.

The Chaburot and the religious teachers accordingly declared a boycott against the ~~נָזֵר / נָזֵר~~ priest who was negligent in the laws of ~~נָזֵר וְנִוְתֵּן~~ and ~~נָזֵר וְנִשְׁלַח~~. One of the principle clauses to ⁸³⁻ It must of course be remembered that with the destruction of the Temple only such dues as went originally for the direct maintenance of the Temple sacrifices were suspended. The dues for the personal support of the priests and Levites continued. השלמים והכארים א' נזיר נא בפניהם. אבל טעשי לא יממש בחטאת והבכאות ליהוין בין בפניהם

(Sheka. VIII 8) The Teruma likewise remained in force.

שהתירמה הטעש נזיר לא יהי... ליהוין בכל הפירות בפניהם חבית וועל נא בפניהם חבות.

So also did the duties of offering the right foreleg, the cheeks and the stomach remain in vogue. הזרע והלחיות והקבה נזיר בארץ בחוץ לאין בפניהם אשא בפניהם חבות. (Ch. XI) which a Chaber had to subscribe was נ"י יתיר על קדשין לאנשי קהלה⁸⁵ and not to allow a נ"י יתיר⁸⁶ to prepare his טומען⁸⁷, that is to say, appropriate the Teruma for him. The religious teachers urged those of the farmers who recognized their authority to give their dues to a Chaber-priest only⁸⁸. In the school of R. Eliezar b. Jacob of Sepphoris (or Tiberias) they taught that he who gives his dues to a נ"י יתיר⁸⁹ burdens him with the sin of improper handling of the priestly dues. According to R. Jochanan he causes the priest's death⁹⁰. The נ"י יתיר enjoyed less favor in the eyes of the teachers and the Chaburot than the נ"י ישראלי⁹¹.

⁸⁴⁻ Bech. 30a where טהרה clearly refers to the cleanliness of the Teruma. See Büchler p. 146ff.; see also Chag. III 4.

The priest, as an ultimate precaution, was required to eat even his profane food in a state of ritual cleanliness. רמייה ורמיה רמייה ורמיה רמייה ורמיה⁹². ונמי דכל קדש⁹³.

In as much as the farmer was not always ~~pre~~cautious in handling that portion of his produce which he set aside as Teruma, the priest was required to ask before accepting it whether the offering is Levitically clean. Nor could the priest accept his dues from every farmer but had to discriminate between the farmer who could be trusted to keep the Teruma he appropriates ritually clean and the farmer who could not.

85- Tosef. Demai. II 2.

86- Aboth. di R. Nathan XLI 66b. Also Tosef. Demai. II 2.

87- מה אהן חבר אף הכהנים חבירים; מכאן אמרי אין גורמים מהרשות אלא לבעל (Sifre Num. 121 p. 41 a)

88- San. 90 b אף מאשי עלי אשמה

89- ופקיעין וריזען און ושייאן ע"ה און מפקיעין וריזען און ע"ה מאן טריבען גו.

Likewise in Tosef. Demai III 1. (Tosef Demai IV 28) כשה שאיינט ערערן →

ויליהן אליא נכהן תבר כל און טריבען קין פלאן אליא נכהן תבר and Tosef.

Demai II 20-22; Terum. VII 4. A warning is sounded for other priests.

90- Chul. 106 a. נ' שולג להאכילה תרילהה (טהרה)

The Am Ha Arez and the Tithes.

With the destruction of the Temple and the cessation of sacrificial worship, the priesthood began to recede gradually from its position of importance and influence in the public and religious life of the people. But just as the hope of a speedy redemption during the first exile in Babylon had called into being that elaborate code of priestly legislation so now did the anticipation of a quick resumption of the priestly services tend to encourage the work of the Rabbis in amplifying and particularizing the ecclesiastical functions and duties. But the priesthood, as might be expected, was losing its importance in the eyes of the people and the Rabbis exerted themselves to the utmost in their endeavors to prop up the crumbling institution. The heavy taxes and tribute which the Roman government extorted likewise contributed to the neglect of the law of tithes.

From the numerous complaints of the Rabbis of the second century, especially those of Galilee where the religious life of the people was always at its lowest ebb⁹¹, we may conclude that the agrarian laws were generally neglected. R. Josiya (of the first half of the second century) declares that בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל מִתְּנַדֵּן בְּנֵי גָּלְילֵה
*... צוֹבֵר שְׁמַנְתָּה*⁹². R. Simon b. Eleazar of Sepphoris (160-200) attributes the loss of the fine taste and odour in the soil product to the violation of the Levitical laws of cleanliness, and the leanness of the crop to the neglect of the laws of tithes.⁹³ An anonymous

91—"Galilee became, therefore, notorious in Judea for the stupidity of its inhabitants, but also for their irreligion."

A.M. Fairbairn, "Studies in Religion and Theology".

92- Aboth di R. Nathan XXXVIII 57 a.

93- Sota IX 13.

Tanna, probably of the same period, attributes the then prevalent disease of croup to the neglect of the tithes⁹⁴. In Aboth V we read אֲבָתָן בְּצַדְקָה נִשְׁתַּחַת, מֵעֶזֶב אַיִלָּם מַלְעָגָת מַלְעָגָת. On the other hand praise is abundantly showered upon him who tithes his produce properly⁹⁵.

The Chaburot threw the weight of their prestige in with the religious teachers to counteract the tendency of neglecting the agrarian laws. The proper tithing of the produce was made a requisite for admission into the Chaburot and one who did not conform with the agrarian laws was considered an Am ha Arez even as he who did not obey the laws of Levitical cleanliness⁹⁶. The Chaber was forbidden to dine with any one whose products were under suspicion of not having been tithed⁹⁷.

94- Sab. 33 ab נִשְׁתַּחַת אֲבָתָן בְּצַדְקָה See also Jer. Berach. IX 13c39.

95- Pesach. 113 a ; See also Aboth di R. Nathan xxxv 39b.

96- אֲבָתָן כְּלַיְלָה בְּשָׂמָחָה וְבְכָלְבָד כְּלַיְלָה See also Berach. 47 b Tosef. Ab. Zora III 10.

97- אֲבָתָן כְּלַיְלָה כְּלַיְלָה כְּלַיְלָה כְּלַיְלָה See also Tosef. Demai III 6

The Talmid Chacham and the Am ha Arez.

The Am ha Arez whom we have just considered was an arbitrary creation of the many agrarian laws and purity laws, and represented all the elements which were not included in the chaburot. Just as the chaburot counted among their constituents men from every rank and file of the people, so did the Am ha Arez include men from all classes of society; the scholar and the priest, the merchant and the farmer, the rich and the poor. But the Am ha Arez whom we found existing in the pre-Tannaitic period - the Am ha Arez who was so called not because of his neglect of one or two specific laws but because of his general laxity in religious observances and of his ignorance of the Law and the teachings of the sages, we, of course, meet with him in the Tannaitic period also. This Am ha Arez had included in turn those who had refused to separate themselves from the gentiles and the half-Jews in the days of Ezra, the Hellenizers in the Greek period, the Sadducees in the period antedating the destruction, and alongside of them all those who disobeyed the Law as interpreted by the religious teachers not on principle but through mere indifference and neglect. The term, as we shall soon see, came to include those Judeo-Christians of the first, second and third centuries who, like the Sadducees of old, had begun to doubt the validity of the traditional interpretation of the Law as set forth by the Pharisaic teachers, and ultimately to oppose them.

Practically none of the references to this Am ha Arez in Talmudic sources can be traced back to the period preceding the Destruction. Even the authorship of the famous statement attributed to Hillel T'orah v'shem 98 is doubtful. In Aboth di R. Nathan the statement is attributed to R. Akiba and, we think, with greater likelihood⁹⁹.

98- Aboth II 5.

The Destruction of the Temple dealt a terrible blow to the religious organization of the people and we hear R. Eliazar the Great the pupil of R. Jochanan b. Saccai complaining bitterly וְעַמּוֹן בָּזֶבֶב מִלְחָמָה
אֲנָשֵׁים וְאֲנָשָׁה כְּפָרָה כְּפָרָה, אֲנָשָׁה כְּפָרָה כְּפָרָה וְאֲנָשָׁה כְּפָרָה
וְאֲנָשָׁה כְּפָרָה כְּפָרָה ? ¹⁰⁰*וְאַתָּה שְׁמַעְנָה וְאַתָּה שְׁמַעְנָה וְאַתָּה שְׁמַעְנָה*. But the national disaster and the religious laxity that followed in its wake called forth renewed efforts at stringency on the part of the religious teachers. The spread of Christianity in the period that followed the destruction of the Sanctuary when the Messianic hope drew new strength and gained more ground among the people likewise urged the Rabbis on in their efforts at stringency and rigor.

100- Sota 49 a.

The Reciprocal attributes of the Talmid Chacham and the Am ha Arez.

We noticed very little friction or bitterness in the relations between the Pharisees and the Am ha Arez in the century preceding the common era. Nay, more, judging from Josephus, they were mutually well disposed and on a very friendly footing. The rigorous observance of all legal minutiae was not an issue between them to be attacked by the one and defended by the other. It was a case of scrupulous observance on the one hand and neglect and laxity - in most cases involuntary - on the other. With the rise of Christianity conditions were changed. Pharisaic legalism, especially in Pauline Christianity, was made an issue. The Am ha Arez instead of considering himself as heretofore a religiously recalcitrant Jew was now made conscious of a certain moral right to disregard Pharisaic ~~teaching~~ practices and to disobey their teachings. Such an attitude was bound to evoke the determined opposition of the Pharisees and friction was inevitable.

The friction became more pronounced in the second century. Pauline Christianity had become aggressive and was rapidly crowding the less militant and more closely Jewish teachings of the founder of Christianity to the background. The intellectual life of the people was now shifting from Judea to Galilee. The religious laxity of the Galileans was proverbial. Lacking the sustaining influence that comes from the presence of great religious schools in their midst, they had fallen far below their Judean brethren in educational and religious ideals and practices. Their life was coarse and to the refined sensibilities of the Rabbis who were accustomed to a higher standard of life and conduct, they were at times repulsive. Add to this the disorganization of the religious life of the people which had followed in the wake of the Bar Kochba revolution and we are in a position to account for the widening of the gap between the Am ha Arez and the Talmid Chacham. The attitude of the scholars of the second century towards the Am ha Arez is best illustrated by the saying of R. Jehuda:

נַי לְשׁוֹבֵן אֶתְנָא בְּאֶתְנָא וְאֶתְנָא בְּנֵי נְבוּדָה¹⁰¹ A Talmid Chacham was not to be found in the company of an Am ha Arez¹⁰², should not partake of his food¹⁰³ nor give of his food to an Am ha Arez¹⁰⁴, must not accompany him on his way¹⁰⁵. Marriage with an Am ha Arez was tabooed¹⁰⁶. An Am haArez was not to be trusted with a secret, was disqualified to serve as a witness, and could not be appointed as a guardian for the estate of orphans or as the keeper of the charity box¹⁰⁷. In their moments of exasperation the scholars went to great extremes in their denunciation of the Am ha Arez. These sayings cannot of course be taken too literally but attempts at interpreting such statements as

101 - B.B. 8 a. Compare this with the saying of R. Jonathan

וְגַעֲנִית בָּאָה בְּאָלָם אֲלֹם בְּזִימָן שְׂרוּשִׁים בְּעוֹלָם

102- Peroch. 43 b. עַתָּה זְבִרִים יָכוֹ לְתָה... וְאֵל בְּחַטָּאת שְׁלֹשׁ עַמּוֹת הָאָרֶץ

103- San 52 b. אָמַר אַלְעַזְרָר (בְּתוֹמָרָת וְשָׁמָד גָּזָב-בָּצָב) לְתָה לְתָה נְפָנִים

פְּהִ? בְּתָלָה לְתָה לְקֹרְטָה שְׁלֵזָב; סְפִיף הַיְמָן לְמָה לְקֹרְטָה שְׁלֵכָב;

104- B.B. 8 a. "בְּתָרְךָ וְרַפְךָ וְיַבְכָּה, לֹא מַצְאָה אֲמִגְדָּל אֲמִגְדָּל."

105- Pesach 49b. אָמַר אַלְעַזְרָר: עַתָּה אָמַר לְהַלְלָה כַּל בְּדִיקָה The reason is interesting. טַלְעָאכְ-כְּרִי הוּא חַיל /אַלְעַזְרָר/ עַל חַיל אַחֲרָה, עַל חַיל אַחֲרָה כְּנָסָךְ

106- Pesach 49b. תַּנְאָךְ לְמָאוֹר אַפְכָה: כָּל הַמְּאַבְתָּלָה כָּאַלְעַזְרָר כָּל פְּתָחָה וְמַעֲזָה לְפָנָיו אֲלֹו, and also פְּתָחָה וְמַעֲזָה אֲלֹו כָּל מְהֻטְשָׁלָה /וְשָׁא בְּתָה תְּהִלָּה... וְאַנְשָׁא בְּתָה עַמְּדָה/

וְאַנְשָׁן שְׁקָעָה אֲדַלְתָּה כָּל מְהֻטְשָׁלָה. These statements are of course grossly exaggerated.

107- Pesach 49.b.

mere school jests without any serious implications¹⁰⁸ or offering apologetic interpolations to them like those suggested by the Rabbis of the Middle ages¹⁰⁹ are unwarranted. That animosity between the scholars and the Am ha Arez at this period existed is indisputable. The sayings of the Rabbis, however, in which these bitter sentiments find expression are of course exaggerated. The very wording and style of these sayings betray their partial sincerity. The saying of R. Jehuda " an Am ha Arez is forbidden to eat meat "¹¹⁰ can only be appreciated when taken as a jest. With the lines of demarkation between Judaism and Christianity being ever more clearly drawn in the third and fourth centuries, with the agrarian and purity laws becoming 108- Like that of Lazarus - "Die Ethik des Judenthums" Note 9 P. 372.

109- Thus Alfasi endeavors to read legalism into this apparent sarcastic remark of R. Elazar

בְּשָׂרֵב לִבְנֵי שְׁנָאָרֶז בְּרַבְנָא מִלְּאָמָר וְעַד כְּלָל
בְּשָׂרֵב לִבְנֵי שְׁנָאָרֶז בְּרַבְנָא מִלְּאָמָר וְעַד כְּלָל

The entire discussion in Pesachim 49 b as to the attitude of the Talmid Chacham to the Am ha Arez has caused much discomfiture to Rabbis who missed the sarcasm of the remarks and considered them as spoken in all seriousness. In a responsum to the Yerushalmi dated 992 (Harkavy תשבות הראים p.197) a Gaon, commenting on the passage just quoted, writes:

פְּרַטְרַת לְבָנָן לְבָנָן לְבָנָן לְבָנָן לְבָנָן לְבָנָן לְבָנָן לְבָנָן
פְּרַטְרַת לְבָנָן לְבָנָן לְבָנָן לְבָנָן לְבָנָן לְבָנָן לְבָנָן לְבָנָן

And applying the same legislative interpretation to R. Jehuda's saying "An Am ha Arez is forbidden to eat meat" he declares

אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי
אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי אֲנָכִי

...נְאָרֶז לְבָנָן יְהִי שְׁאָלָה When treated in this light the statements in Pesach 49 b become impossible.

110- Pesach 49 b The method of deducing this rule from the Thora is the clearest proof of it.

obsolete and with the transfer of the seat of Rabbinic activity to Babylonia, the factional strifes between the scholars and the Am ha Arez gradually died away. Already in the second century we find traces of a more conciliatory and complaisant attitude¹¹¹. But statements by Babassis of the third century like the following *כַּל מִתְּנָא כִּי אֵין קָבָה עַל יְהוָה וְעַל אֶחָד מִבְּנֵי בְּנֵי*¹¹² and *וְאֵין כִּי אֵין קָבָה עַל יְהוָה וְעַל אֶחָד מִבְּנֵי בְּנֵי*¹¹³ clearly indicate that the great storm of passion and antipathy had subsided¹¹⁴. Faint echoes of the struggle are heard in the fourth century¹¹⁵, but never after that¹¹⁶.

111- The saying of R. Jehuda b. Illai in B.M. 33 b.

112- B.M. 85 a.

113 Aboth di Nathan p. 64 Ed. Schechter.

114- Such statements as these are, however, still found: זָהָרְנוּ שְׁנָיו
שְׁנָיו שְׁנָיו; בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל כְּרָמִים נְקָדְמָה עֲלֵיכֶם; בְּנֵי
יִשְׂרָאֵל כְּלָמָדָה (Sab. 63 a) and the grossly exaggerations of R. Jochanan of Sepphoris and R.Eleazar b. Pedath. (Pesach. 49 B)

115- Menach. 99 b.

116- Compare Habba bar Huna's (320-375 circa) statement

(Shebu. 30 b) with any of the violent expressions of hatred of the Palestinian Tannaim of the second century.

The Publican as an Am ha Arez.

Great as was the hatred of the scholars to the Am ha Arez it was not equal to that fierce and inexorable hatred which they entertained towards some of the Ame ha Arez who had allied themselves with the exacting Roman conquerors and were extorting mercilessly the burdensome tributes from the people. The publicans or προσδιό were considered as veritable outcasts and the scum of society. These προσδιό had no limited tax levy which they collected everywhere alike but they extorted as much as they wished¹¹⁷. Having to satisfy the demands of the ἀρχιτελεῖς λόγιον, they were not scrupulous about using the severest measures in extracting their taxes. That such measures would incur the hatred of the people and especially of the patriotic and justice loving scholars is self evident.

In the eyes of the scholar the publican represented the lowest ~~station~~ ~~stratum~~ of the Am ha Arez¹¹⁸. He was not admitted into the Chaburot and a Chaber on becoming a "gabai" or a "Moches" was suspended from the chaburot¹¹⁹. He was disqualified as a witness¹²⁰. The entire family of a publican shared the same legal and social status with him¹²¹.

117 - See Luke III 13 : "Extort no more than that which is appointed".

118- The contrast in the following Tofesta brings out this point well:

תְּפִלָּה וְתְּפִלָּה לְאַתָּה שֶׁנָּאשֵׁר בְּעַמְּךָ: תְּהִלָּה בְּעַמְּךָ אֲמָתָּה בְּעַמְּךָ פְּלִימָה בְּעַמְּךָ
...פְּלִימָה בְּעַמְּךָ וְתְּפִלָּה בְּעַמְּךָ כְּלִילָה בְּעַמְּךָ ... פְּלִימָה בְּעַמְּךָ וְתְּפִלָּה

Tosefta Dem II 7.

119- Berach 30 b; Tosef. Dem. III 4.

120- San 25b.

121- Shebu. 39a....

stolen goods¹²². To lodge with a publican or partake of his board was considered disgraceful¹²³.

122- B. K. X 1.

123- The New Testament abounds in illustrations See. Mat. IX 11; Mk. II 16; Luke V 30; XIX 7; See also Mat. XVIII 17, V 46.

The Judeo-Christian Am ha Arez.

Some Talmudic references to the Am ha Arez in the first century and especially in the second century are directly aimed against the Judeo-Christians. Else the statement of R. Dosa b. Hyrcanus (about 100)

מִשְׁנַת יְהוָה מִתְחַדֵּל לְאַמְתִּינָה וְאֶתְנָה אֲמָתָה ¹²⁴ remains inexplicable ¹²⁴, and the well known saying in Aboth אַבְתָּא מִתְחַדֵּל בְּאַמְתָה ¹²⁵ is likewise an enigma. When, however, we bear in mind that the early Judeo-Christians had synagogues of their own which, through Pauline influence, were

124- Aboth III 10: The traditional interpretation ?תְּמִימָה תְּמִימָה

מִתְחַדֵּל בְּסֻבְבָּן קְרָתָה בְּשֹׂאָן כְּרָתָה בְּשֹׂאָן and likewise that of Zunz (Gottesdienstl. Art. p. 1 ff.) "das in dem Worte מִתְחַדֵּל welches Versammlung oder "Gemeinde" bedeutet, durchaus einer gottesdienstlichen aktes oder einer religiösen Bestimmung keine Bezeichnung enthalte*seit*" is of course untenable. modem means a house of prayer. Friedländer (Die Religiösen Bewegungen" p. 82 note 4) suggests that the πόλεις οἰκονοματα referred to are the synagogues of the Hellenistic Jews who were looked upon as πόλεις by the Pharisaic teachers, in which synagogues Jesus and later Paul, Barnabas, and others preached. From which the reception, these synagogues of Greek Jews gave ^{to} Jesus and his disciples we have no reason to think that they were Ah ha Arez. On the contrary the accounts given of the attitude of the members of these synagogues (such as that in Acts VI 9ff.) would class them as zealous Pharisees rather than lax Ame ha Arez.

125- Abot V 10: Dr. Bäck (Litter. Blatt Jhrg 14 p 121) and Dr. Caro (ibid Jhrg. 10 no. 29) both have an inkling of the truth when they say that this statement clearly refers to a sect of communists. But when they represent the Chaberim as exponents of individualism and the Ame ha Arez as members of an Essaic commune they are, of course, far off the mark.

later called *EKKΛΗΣΙΑ*¹²⁶ and that, according to Paul, to be a member of such a church meant to be above the law¹²⁷ the saying of R. Dosa is easily explained. And when we recall the Essenean philosophy of early Christianity "all things that are mine are thine and thine are mine" the statement in Abot gains in meaning and significance. In the definitions of the Am ha Arez given in Beroch. 47 b and Sota 22 a (nearly all by Rabbis of the second century) we can detect in each one a direct reference to the Judeo-Christians who began to neglect the laws enumerated¹²⁸. The insistence of the Rabbis upon the daily recital of the Shema is self-explanatory. The early Christians were likewise inclined to slight the laws of Phylacteries and Zizith¹²⁹. The great 126 "Συνάγεσι only expresses the empiric matter of fact, ἐκκλησία contains as well a dogmatic judgment of value. From this distinction between the terms which, as it seems, soon became a prevailing one even in Judaism, it is easily understood that Christian usage took possession almost exclusively of the latter expression" Schürer- II Div. II note 47.

127- Rom. VII 4-6.

א/ב' ברכות א' 22א קרא שורה אחת שטוחה ולא שוטה על מילים חכמים זה עתה
ולאחר מכן טרויו פטניין. ב' פטא' ואיך כזאת או לא? ציראות כבלן. א/ב' ברכות
128- פ' א' א' א' ? כל שאורן קרא, ק' שחרת עוזביה בברכות ר' דבוי ליטאי; א' ח' א'

129- Mat. XXVIII 4-6: Friedländer (Die Religiösen Beweg., plll Note 5) approaches the truth when he says "Diesen Protest allein schon lässt den Am ha Arez, der sich über äussere religiöse Zeremonien leicht hinwegsetzt, erkennen..."

stress laid upon דִּין וְלֹשֶׁן וְרַבָּרָא in the second and the third centuries is, we think, due also to the spread of Pauline Christianity which was hostile to the Law as interpreted by the Pharisaic teachers. The student must serve # a Talmid Chacham in order that he might learn how to act in the true spirit of the Law. The statements from the mouth of R. Akiba, the champion of Rabbinism against Christianity are significant *אֲזַה מְלֵא כָּל־פְּנֵי רַבִּי עֲקִיבָּה*¹³⁰ and *לֹא־אָמַרְתִּי כִּי־אָמַרְתִּי*¹³¹.

130- Aboth di R. Nathan XXVI

131- Jer. Naz. VII 1: So likewise Aboth di R. Nathan p. 56 Ed.

Schechter; San. 88 b.; Sota 33 a.

The Am ha Arez in the New Testament.

While the Pharisaic teachers have it all their own way in Talmudic writings the Am ha Arez finds his champions in the New Testament authors. Jesus is depicted by these writers as the very spokesman and champion of the Am ha Arez - "the multitude which knoweth not the law¹³² against "those that bind heavy burdens and grievous to be born and lay them on men's shoulders"¹³³". His disciples Matthew and Levi were publicans¹³⁴ and Zacheus was an *ἀρχιτελώνη*¹³⁵, Peter and John were unlearned and ignorant men¹³⁶. It is the Am ha Arez, the publicans and the sinners that flock around Jesus and protect him¹³⁷. In defiance of the Talmudic injunction πάντας συνιέντει τοῖς οὐρανοῖς Jesus is made to sit and dine with them to the great vexation of the Pharisees¹³⁸. In the face of the great endeavors of the chaburot

132- John VII 49

133- Mat. XXIII 4.

134- Mat. X 3; Luke V 27

135 Luke XIX 2

136- Acts IV 3.

137- Luke XXII 6, XXIII 1; Mat. VIII 1 and many others.

138- Mat. IX 10,11 etc. See Shailer Matthews "A History of New Testament times" p. 172.

and the innumerable Pharisaic laws of ritual cleanliness the import of a statement such as the following is self-evident: "And yet unto me hath God showed that I should not call any man common or unclean".
To the Pharisaic declaration "~~Thou art not yet born~~ ^{139/12.} 'Rebbe ha arez have no future life'" the retort is hurled back... "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, Hypocrites! because you shut the kingdom of heaven against men; for ye enter not in yourselves neither suffer ye them that are entering in to enter." ^{140/13.}

There is no doubt that many expressions of antipathy against the Pharisees found in the Gospels are products of the second if not of the third century. The Judeo-Christians of the second century incurred the hostility of the Pharisees because they refused to participate in the Bar Kochba uprising¹⁴¹ and we have reasons to think that the patriotic Pharisees persecuted them.¹⁴²

Hand

1/2. ¹³⁹⁻ Acts X 28.

WRHS ¹³⁹
113. ¹⁴⁰ Mat. XXIII 13; It is doubtful whether the "Assumptio Mosis" likewise voices the sentiments of the Am ha Arez against the Pharisaic teachers. (Rosenthal Vier. ^{Apol.} ~~Apok.~~ Bücher aus der Zeit und Schule R. Akibas p.24ff.) Bousset's (Religion des Judenthums 101.4) objection seems to be a valid one. "Ich halte es für ganz unmöglich, dass mit dieses Polemik Pharisäer gemeint sein könnten. Der Satz, der allein zu dieser Vermutung Anlass gibt" Röhre mich nicht an, damit du mich nicht verunreinigst" kann sich ebenso auf den Hochmat der Priester beziehen".

141- The Judeo-Christians who denied Jewish nationality and "who could not deny their own Messiah by recognizing the political revolution as such" (Schöpfer) could not of course participate in the uprising.

142 Eusebius- "chronicon" ed. Schoene II 168 "Qui dux ~~rebellum~~ rebellionis Judaeorum erat Chochebas multos e Christianis diversis suppliciis affecit quia molebant procedere cum illo ad pugnam contra Romanos".