

Abba Hillel Silver Collection Digitization Project

Featuring collections from the Western Reserve Historical Society and The Jacob Rader Marcus Center of the American Jewish Archives

MS-4787: Abba Hillel Silver Papers, 1902-1989.

Series V: Writings, 1909-1963, undated.

Reel Box Folder 174 63 233

Sol M. Hexter, memorial at funeral of, Cleveland, 1929.

1929-30

The passing of Mr. Sol M. Hexter is an irreparable loss to his family, to his friends and to the community.

The loss is greatest, of course, to the members of his immediate family who knew him best and loved him most. The world's appraisal of a man may be just or unjust, its appreciation of him merited or not. At best the world's judgment is based only on a part of a man's real self. But the appraisal of those most intimate is most true and accurate for it is based on the whole character and life of the man.

Mr. Hexter will be most poignantly missed by those who in his family circle knew him as the devoted husband, father and grandfather.

But our entire community will miss him. Mr. Hexter was one of its best and most worthy representatives. He belonged to that older generation of men who gave character, tone and prestige to our Cleveland Jewish community. He possessed a fine sense of community responsibility and an eager heart which responded generously to all worthy community causes. He was always among the first to whom the community turned for support, both moral and financial, in all its social enterprises. He gave of himself unstintingly and taught others how to give and to serve.

A man of absolute integrity of spirit, Mr. Hexter was an inspiration to others. His was a high code of conduct both in his private and in his business life and the community was accordingly proud to claim him as one of its distinguished citizens.

He was a loyal and faithful Jew. There was an element of pride and enthusiasm in his Judaism. He was a Jew not only because of the accident of birth but because he loved and cherished the sacred ideals and traditions of our great historic faith. For many years he was an active member of the Temple and worshipped in the beauty of holiness at the ancient shrine of his ancestors. The Rabbi of the Temple will forever be grateful to him for his unfailing support and cooperation and for the privilege of a profferred and treasured friendship.

Mr. Hexter had a rare capacity for friendship. All men, both young and old, loved him and were drawn to him. He was jovial and hearty, possessed of an unquenchable ardor for life and a contagious buoyancy of spirit. He radiated good cheer. Whatever of sorrow came into his life he hid from the eyes of men and bore his burdens courageously in silence.

The life of Mr. Sol M. Hexter does not end with the death of his body. Such a life bequeathes unto all who knew him and loved him the legacy of a host of precious memories which will become their strength and their consolation in the days to come.

"The righteous and noble are alive even in death ... "

I lamy loss the famy - only they fully weeks H. the wayer. It las - for he was alones to the They lave him mist - The apper of outsides may the pest of now paid solvani organite in and the man the west was The mil min the destar heart. Thenand froud father E. Com. well min him - He was one of to best + most unty representation 46. - He has a pur never of Cores responsibly and a ready heart to respond to until mill cause - the Hester aus Mr. H. was slung among the first to who can de french product from supplient, mondt from in all a social enterprise - He gang heaving to tanget their her to fine of how to them. 3. General abot, integerty the un an imples. be other num. His word high crob of purit of public constant and throw was poul telous him as & cityen If the way a longer, farthful gours The was an alewant of purch trackerson this

Judanin - He was a few well with be be

Somewhat the wash only but be be liked the edeals + that I the front best fish. It was an active participant in the My 1 the Temple - and worshift at the bolines - Jother wir the banks 9 Jung Hel Condline The nalles count able specific for the and the and the and the fine. He dodinted toppines - He tot whater more cam into his left, he led it from the eger s men- & bre the huden canagement in solene

The passing of Mr. Sol. M. Hexter is an irreparable loss to his family, to his friends and to the community. The loss is greatest, of course, to the members of his immediate family who knew him best and loved him most.

The world's appraisal of a man may be just or unjust, its appreciation of him merked on not.

his life's work may be over-estimated or under-estimated. At best the world's in judgment is based on only a part of a man's real off.

But the appraisal of those most intimate, is most true and accurate for it is based on the whole character and life the

Mr. Hexter will be most poignantly missed as the devoted husband, father and grandfather.

and most worthy representatives. He belonged to that older generation who gave character, tone and prestige to the Cleveland Jewish community. He possessed a fine sense of community responsibility and an eager heart which responded generously to all worthy community responsibility and an eager heart which first to the community turned for support both moral and financial, in all its social enterprises. He gave of himself unstintingly and taught others how to give and to serve.

A man of absolute integrity of spirit, Mr. Hexter was an inspiration to others.

His was in high code of conduct both in his private and in his business life and the community was proud to claim him as one of its distinguished citizens.

He was a loyal and faithful Jew. There was an element of pride and enthusiasm in his Judaism. He was a Jew not only because of the accident of birth but because he loved and cherished the sacred ideals and traditions of great historic faith. For many years he was an active member of the Temple and worshipped in the beauty of holiness at the ancient shrine of his ancestors. The Rabbi of the Temple will forever be interested to him for his unfailing support and cooperation and for the privilege of a proferred and treasured friendship.

Mr. Hexter had a rare capacity for friendship. All men, young and old, loved him and were drawn to him. He was jovial and hearty, possessed of an unquenchable ardor for life and a contagious buoyancy of spirit. He radiated good cheer. Whatever sorrow came into his life he hid from the eyes of men and bore his burdens courageously in silence.

The life of Mr. Sol M. Hexter does not end with the death of his body. Such a life bequeathes unto all who knew him and loved him the legacy of a host of precious memories which become their strength and it that to convert their consolation. The righteous and noble are alive even in death....

