RECREATION CONGRESS

The National Recreation Congress is a cooperative gathering of all who are interested in recreation. Its central purpose is to furnish opportunity for an exchange of information and experience.

The program and other features of the Recreation Congress are designed to serve the recreation movement as a whole. To this end suggestions are sought and received from many sources. This is the 25th Congress.

The organization of the Congress is one of the regular services of the National Recreation Association.

NATIONAL RECREATION ASSOCIATION

For over thirty-four years the National Recreation Association, serving as the clearing house for the recreation movement in America, has been the means of focusing the attention of the nation upon the need for and importance of recreation. It has worked to determine needs, plan adequate programs, train leaders, raise standards of service and leadership, put its resources behind private and governmental agencies interested in recreation, interpret recreation to the public, carry on research, and to serve as a unifying force for all the recreation forces of America.

The Association in the last World War carried on an extensive recreation and morale program under the name of the War Camp Community Service. Its resources today are being related to and focused upon the defense program.

It is supported by membership dues and voluntary contributions. Those interested in these purposes are urged to contribute.
