THE CRISIS OF OUR AGE

by

Dr. Abba Hillel Silver
The Temple
Cleveland, Ohio

My dear Friends: This age in which we live is a truly great age, one of the greatest in Human history. We are too near our times properly to appraise them. One requires distance in order to see great objects in their proper perspective. We ourselves are too much involved in the turmoil, the fears, and the conflicts of our day to see objectively the amazing new pattern of life which is emerging. In a generation or two, when mankind will have entered quieter waters and a period of consolidation will have followed this explosive and revolutionary age of ours, men will be able to look back upon it and evaluate it properly.

Many people today are filled with dark forebodings and are quite pessimistic about our times. They are quick to describe them as materialistic, as lacking in idealism, in aim and purpose, and as drifting helplessly to disaster.

There are very few people who see this age of ours as a great age. I am persuaded that it is truly a great age. Great and historic things are coming to pass in our day. I am not thinking at the moment of the new worlds which science is continually disclosing, the new insights into the nature of matter and energy, the new sources of power and wealth, the methods of production, distribution, transportation and communication. I am not referring to the amazing progress in the medical sciences which has so markedly improved the health of the human race and increased the average length of life, nor to the marvels of engineering and the miracles of construction all over the globe. Inventions and discoveries come in such rapid succession in our day that they no longer excite any unusual comment. We take it all in our stride - the flying age, the television age, the atomic age - and what next? The inter-planetary age, perhaps. Certainly, man is achieving in our day in the scientific fields more in a decade than in a hundred years heretofore.

In characterizing our age as great, I am thinking in terms of social progress and welfare, in terms of human advancement and civilization. More is being done in our day for the improvement of the conditions of the life of the common man, for the raising of his standard of living, his health, his education, and for his protection against the disabilities of sickness, unemployment and old age, than in any generation - than in any five generations in the past. Never were peoples and governments so much concerned with the improvement of the lives of the forgotten men, who had lived in unrelieved and unspeakable poverty, ignorance and disease through the long and weary centuries. Never were more determined efforts made to bring about a fairer sharing of the wealth that is produced and a better way of life for all.

Never have the submerged races and peoples of the earth, who for centuries groaned under foreign or native tyranny, risen as they have risen in our day to demand and to achieve, as they have to a large measure achieved, freedom and self-determination. Within the last ¹⁰ ~~sixty~~ years one-fourth of the earth's population - more than five hundred million non-self-governing people - have obtained their political ^{self-determination} ~~freedom~~. Imperialism and colonialism are in their death-throes. Backward peoples are pressing forward into the light of a new day, and the exploitation of the dark races of the earth is rapidly drawing to a close.

This is the meaning of much of the restlessness in Asia and Africa which is often presented as communist agitation

What kind of faith then will serve us best in this great age? That which will sustain and inspire us in the long, hard struggle to establish this good society towards which we wish to move. Such a faith, in my judgment, is built upon three postulates: the reality of purpose in the universe, the sovereignty of personality, and the sanctity of method. Within such a faith man will find that measure of dignity, confidence and courage without which the struggle for social progress cannot long be maintained and the promise of human life must be abandoned to defeat.

Somewhere Professor Einstein writes: "What is the meaning of human life or of organic life altogether? To answer this question at all implies a religion. Is there any sense, then, you ask, in putting it? I answer, the man who regards his own life and that of his fellow creatures as meaningless is not merely unfortunate, but almost disqualified for life."

As man develops in awareness of himself, of his society and of the material world about him, and gains in sensitiveness and comprehension, he acquires also glimpses into the unfoldment of purpose in the universe. He comes to sense what the Prophet Isaiah sensed when he declared: "He is a God Who created the world not for chaos, and formed it to be inhabited." The order of nature is purposive! Like all human insights into fundamentals, this conviction of purpose and meaning is not clear beyond any peradventure of doubt. It is seen as through a glass darkly, but it is sufficiently persuasive and responsive to basic human needs to be enheartening and strengthening.

Addressing the Harvard Law School Association of New York back in 1913, Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes gave expression to just such a strong, mystic, albeit indeterminate conviction: "I think it is not improbable that man, like the grub that prepares a chamber for the winged thing it never has been but is to be - that man may have cosmic destinies that he does not understand.

And so beyond the vision of battling races and an impoverished earth, I catch a dreaming glimpse of peace." And he voiced his faith "in a universe not measured by our fears", but one "that has thought and more than thought inside of it."

All mechanical interpretations of the universe break down in the presence of "this thought and more than thought", and the phenomena of order, of life, of mind, the evolution of man and the mounting quality of his ideals and values. Even dead matter itself defies such a cramped interpretation. Science seems to have abandoned in our day all purely mechanistic explanations of the universe. A confident faith in a controlling and beneficent purpose, unfolding in the universe, of which we and our struggles and our aspirations are an integral part is, in my judgment, an essential ingredient of that faith which will serve us best in the long struggle for the building of the good society and the attainment of man's hopes. It is the conviction of purpose which alone can bridge for man the gulf between his isolated and homeless self and the apparently alien and indifferent world about him. Man will feel at home in the cosmos only if he believes that it is his Father's house. "Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place. . . ." Without this faith, he will fall victim to one or another form of moral nihilism as his mind comes to the edge of the wilderness.

Faith in the worth and sovereignty of the individual and of human personality is another essential element of that faith which will serve us best.

In one of his recently published "Unpopular Essays", Bertrand Russell writes: "The importance of Man, which is the one indispensable dogma of the theologians, receives no support from a scientific view of the future of the solar system." To which one is prompted to reply, so much the worse for the so-called scientific view, which doubtless will go through many revisions and

MISSING PAGE (S)

The classic way of religion has never been fully tried in the world. To-day in an evolving atomic age wherein man's power will be vastly augmented, including the power of self-destruction, it is being ignored more thoroughly than at any time in human history. State and class autocracies have proceeded on the theory that there is no law superior to theirs, and that their brutal methods are justified by their results.

The shame of our age is that men are committing the most shameless acts of immorality in the name of high morality. Methods which are abhorred and denounced in one's opponents are rationalized and justified as moral imperatives when employed by oneself. Men talk of justice and brotherhood, of a classless society and universal peace, but they act as if these ideals were demons out of hell, lashing them on to the most horrible acts of injustice, hatred and violence.

For our civilization to survive, it is clearly necessary to revise this mood and thought pattern of our age, and to recharge our world culture with a new devotion to the sanctity of the only true method of human progress.

What I have said concerning the kind of faith which will serve us best in this great age of vast unfolding promise may be re-stated in more familiar terms. But I believe that they all add up to the same thing. The faith that will serve us best is the belief that there is a God indwelling in all nature, and yet transcending it, near to man in all his needs and yet beyond man's comprehension; that man is fashioned out of the earth but is nevertheless made in the spiritual image of God; that bound as he is by his physical and mental limitations, he is nevertheless boundless in his moral aspirations and is free to determine his own spiritual progress; that all men are equal in their essential humanity and that there is but one moral law for rich and poor, ruler and subject, native-born and stranger; that life is good and is

My dear Friends:

I believe that the age in which we live is a great age and that we are moving towards an even greater age. I believe that our present age is one of the greatest in human history. We are too near our times properly to appraise them. One requires distance in order to see great objects in their proper perspective. We ourselves are too much involved in the groping and conflicts of our day to see objectively the amazing new patterns of life which are emerging.

Many people are quick to describe our age as materialistic, as lacking in idealism, in aim and purpose, as an age of breakdown and disintegration.

There are very few people who evaluate properly the historic events, so great in amplitude and consequence, which are taking place all about us. I am not thinking at the moment of the new worlds which science is continually disclosing, the new insights into the nature of matter and energy, the new sources of power and wealth, the new methods of production, distribution, transportation and communication. I am not referring to the amazing progress in the medical sciences which has so markedly improved the health of the human race and increased the average length of life, nor to the marvels of engineering and the miracles of construction.

In characterizing our age as great, I am thinking in terms of social progress and welfare, in terms of human advancement and civilization. More is being done in our day for the improvement of the conditions of the common man, for the raising of his standard of living, his health, his education, and for his protection against the disabilities of sickness, unemployment and old age, than in any generation, than any five generations in the past. Never were more determined efforts made to bring about a fairer sharing of the wealth that is produced and a better way of life for all. This is religion.

Never have the submerged races and peoples of the earth risen as they have risen in our day to demand and to achieve, as they have to a large measure achieved, freedom and self-determination. Within the last ten years one-fourth of the earth's population - more than five hundred million non-self-governing people - have obtained their political self-determination. Imperialism and colonialism are in their death-throes. Backward peoples are pressing forward into the light of a new day, and the exploitation of the dark races of the earth is rapidly drawing to a close. This is religion.

What we are witnessing in our day, if we have eyes not only to see things, but to see into the heart of things, is not social disintegration, but a radical new reintegration of humanity, a profound change in the social evolution of man, a change not free, of course, from dangers - for there is no progress without danger - but one of boundless and immeasurable potentialities.

I do not wish to overdraw the picture. I am not suggesting that our age is rapidly approaching perfection, or that the millenium is just around the corner.

The important thing to consider is not whether we are on the eve of the millenium but whether the major trends of our age are in the direction of the hoped-for good society, or away from it. Is our age trying to eradicate poverty and illiteracy and to raise the standard of living of people, regardless of race or color or creed? Is it trying to satisfy the legitimate aspirations of peoples to national freedom and independence? Is it trying to organize the world for peace and for international cooperation? I believe that in all these major trends, our age has given welcome evidence of great determination and considerable progress. It is moving purposefully in the right direction - the abolition of war, the reduction of poverty, and the elimination of racial inequality. These are the three major trends of our century. What is tearing our world apart is a difference not in objective, but in method.

Ours is a great age, and I believe that we are entering into an even greater age. The wave of the future, the true direction of man's pilgrimage and destiny may be, from time to time, thwarted and opposed, drawn off and retarded, but it cannot be permanently stopped.

In our day this forward thrust of man has encountered the stubborn and insolent resistance of Nazi Fascist and Communist dictatorship. These have violently resisted the spiritual aspirations which constitute mankind's wave of the future. They put shackles on man, even when they promised him larger freedoms. They divided and stratified men, even when they prated about a classless society. They fomented war even when they preached peace. But the onmoving tides of man's spirit, fathoms deep and irresistible, have now swept over the ruins of some of these sinister aberrations and dark conspiracies, though they have not as yet entirely obliterated them. And the tides are now swirling around the bastions of the remaining dictatorships of the earth. They will surely succumb. They cannot, in the long run, win in the contest for man's heart and man's loyalties. Man has struggled through the long, weary centuries to free himself from the bondage of nature. He will not voluntarily and for

The forces of law should, of course, be invoked against those who by force would destroy our democracy. Active conspirators against our liberties should be ferreted out and punished by law. But the law should be clear and specific; and the laudable traditions of American court procedures which safeguard the basic rights of every accused should be scrupulously employed in the process.

In fighting subversion we must make doubly sure that we are fighting subversion, not just unpopular views. It is a great temptation to make our dislike for the unlike synonymous with patriotism and to brand and excommunicate every dissenter whose disagreement may be grounded in a profound patriotic devotion and loyalty to our country. We must ask ourselves what it is that we want to suppress and why we want to suppress it and whether the suppression will ultimately serve the best interests of free and democratic America.

My dear friends: Among the most inspiring symbols in the speech and thought of mankind are bridges and walls. I have always been fascinated by them. They have so much to say.

Walls have their definite value and purpose in our lives. They carve for us out of unlimited space which is too vast for us to dominate, a smaller area which we can subdue to our needs. They enclose us in a manageable world which we can master. This gives us a sense of at-homeness which is good for us. Walls and fences often also serve a good purpose in defining beyond the peradventure of doubt what is ours and what is our neighbors. The poet Robert Frost put it: "Good fences make good neighbors." To the building of such walls for protection, privacy and ownership, there can be no objection. They are part of the necessary routine of civilized life.

But there are other walls which men erect which serve no such good purpose, but on the contrary, are harmful to the best interests of society.

Prejudice, intolerance, race and group hatreds are tragic walls which men build around themselves. Our age has witnessed the erection of many such forbidding walls. Whenever there is unhappiness, discontent or unrest among men, racial and religious bigots swarm out of their dark holes, sweep over the land and sow the dragon seed of division, discord and hate.

Sometimes even good and respectable people build walls around themselves which are effective blocks to mutual understanding and good will. They build walls of social exclusiveness. They segregate themselves in some illusory eminence and hug to their bosoms the delusion that they are somehow better than the common run of humanity. In the sight of God there are, of course, no Brahmins and no untouchables - only children of the dust who, in their brief careers on earth, may find a measure of happiness by helping one another in goodness and sharing with one another in love.

Our world is divided today by political walls and iron curtains. There are those who would build these walls still higher, who resent those who suggest ways for razing these walls and leveling them off. In every age there have been the wall-building doctrinaires, the exponents of the irreconcilable. Either I or you survive! No middle road - no meeting ground - no compromise! This, of course, is the fateful road to war, and wars only serve to erect new walls on the ruined foundations of the old.

There are nations which put their trust and security in strong walls, in impregnable Maginot lines, in Chinese walls. But they all crumble sooner or later. "The Lord God hath a day upon every lofty tower and upon every fortified wall." A nation must not put its sole trust in armament, even as formidable as atomic bombs. The very strength of a nation often brings about its downfall. It becomes over-confident, and precipitate; it drains off its strength in endless military adventures; its domestic economy breaks down, and unrest and revolution finally weaken it and prepare it for ultimate defeat.

A nation should put its trust in the strength of its moral and intellectual life, the justice and fairness of its laws and institutions, the well-being and contentment of its citizens, the moral training of its youth, and the stability of its homes.

Our religions urged men to be builders of bridges rather than of walls. Life abounds in tragic chasms which separate men, in deep rivers and their swift, dark currents. Men should learn to build bridges across them, and bridges are more difficult to build than walls. Charity, compassion, sympathy, magnanimity, great mindedness are such bridges. So is friendship; so is tolerance; so is brotherhood. "Love thy neighbor as thyself" is perhaps the noblest and most enduring of all bridges ever devised. "With malice towards none, with charity for all," is another bridge which an immortal American built across a river of blood and civil war.

Every earnest effort at international understanding and cooperation is a bridge leading to the Kingdom of God, to the good society. The League of Nations was such a bridge. It collapsed. Bridges often collapse and must be rebuilt. The United Nations is such a bridge. It is in danger of collapse. We must see to it that it does not collapse. War is never a bridge. At best it is a Bridge of Sighs leading men from doom to death.

The whole magnificent ethical message of our great historic faiths may be summed up in these symbols of walls and bridges.

THE NATIONAL ANTHEM

O say can you see by the dawn's early light
What so proudly we hailed at the twilight's last gleaming—
Whose broad stripes and bright stars, through the perilous fight,
O'er the ramparts we watched were so gallantly streaming!
And the rockets' red glare, the bombs bursting in air,
Gave proof through the night that our flag was still there;
O! say does that star-spangled banner yet wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave?

"HAIL TO THEE, OUR ALMA MATER"

From the beauty land Ohio comes a universal praise.

'Tis the song of Alma Mater that her sons and daughters raise.

'Tis a hail to Kent forever, on the Cuyahoga shore.

Now we join the loving thousands
as they sing it o'er and o'er.

Hail to Thee, Our Alma Mater
Oh, how beautiful thou art,
High enthroned upon the hilltop,
Reigning over every heart.

From the hilltop Alma Mater, gazing
on her portals wide,

Sees the coming generations as they throng to seek her side.

Seek her side to win her blessing, throng her gates to bear her name.

Leave her gates to sing her praises;
go afar to spread her fame.

Hail to Thee, Our Alma Mater
Oh, how young and strong thou art,
Planning for the glorious future,
Firm enthroned in ev'ry heart.

THE DISTINCTIVE COLOR IN THE HOODS

In the hoods of the faculty and guests, the color of the velvet border indicates the type of degree, while the lining of the hood shows the color of the university that bestowed the degree.
